

THE RESIDENCE OF THE PARTY OF T

AMES," said Mrs. Hunt, as her husband was swallowing his not coffee, preparatory to taking a flying trip by the 8:50 car to the city, "I want you to do a few little errands in town for me. My best hat is at the milliner's to be furbished up a little, and your Aunt Jenkins is liable to come any minute, and Maggie is scalding over the pickles, and she'll burn 'em to a cinder if I'm not here to see after her, and dear little Fido's eyes look as if he might be coming down with fits, and my head aches fit to split, and really I don't feel as if I could go to town to-day, and there are some things I must have."

"I've no time to look after a lot of women's gimeracks," said Mr. Hunt, contemptuously, "and I-" but his wife did not allow him to pro-

"Oh, James, you really must find the time-unless you feel that your judgment would not be good in matters of this kind. I know that not one man in 40 knows anything about shopping, and-"

"Humph!" grunted Mr. Hunt, gulping down an extra large mouthful of oatmeal. "Judgment, indeed! If I couldn't do better a thousand times at the shopping business than any woman, then I'd be everlastingly jiggered! Yes, I would, I could buy $500 worth of things while you were retting ten cents' worth of handkerchiefs. Bah! it makes me tired to hear so much twaddle about men not knowing how to shop,"

"Well, if you really think you would be able to judge about these things I want, James," said Mrs. Hunt, diplomatically, for well she knew that the surest way to induce him to do a thing was to imply that he was not competent to do it. "if you really think you know about

"Know? Of course I know. Why shouldn't I know? Any fool would know about 'em. Fire off your list, and be quick about it, Polly, for Eve got to get a move on."

"Let me write a list. I'm afraid your memory isn't quite so good as woman's, and-"

"Fol-de-rol! I can forget more in six seconds than the average woman an remember in a lifetime," said Mr. Hunt, as he wriggled into his overout and fumbled in the pockets. 'Where in the dickens are my gloves? Strange that my gloves are never where I put 'em! Whatever have you fone with them gloves, Polly?"

"Here they are, right in your hat, lames, and now listen to what I tell you, and try and not make any misakes. I want five yards of blue ambrie for Rosa's Henrietta dress, and a card of hooks and eyes - De 'long's-humps, you know, and some black canvas, and two yards of turtey red, medium bright, and four of cheese cloth, and a paper of needles-sixes, and some school shoes for Tommy, 141/4, and rubber seels and no nails in the toes, and sh, get me a jar of cold cream, and ome celery salt, and some stove dacking-Blazerine, and-

"There's the car!" shouted Mr. Sunt, as he dived down the front steps, followed by his wife's persistent cry of-

"Don't forget two pairs' of black tockings, medium weight-"What a tom-fool mess of stuff women do have to buy," mused Mr. funt as he settled himself in the ar, unfolded the morning paper, and slanced over the column headed "Fianneigh."

As Mr. Hunt issued from his place I business at night, he began to try nd recall what his wife had told im, and at the first dry goods store e came to be rushed in, believing, s most of his sex do, that a woman ever purchases anything except at dry goods store.

He hurried up to the counter nearst the door, and began to reel off is wants to the lofty-looking young adv in attendance.

"I want five yards of red Henrieta for a blue cambric dress, and some umpy hooks, long ones, you know, nd two red turkeys, medium smart, and a cheese in a cloth, and-

"Sir," said the young woman, with neffable disdain, "this is not a ment mrket. It is Messrs, Pull & Shrinkm's dry goods emporium, and this the soan lady's department-" "Yes, yes, so I believe," said Mr. funt, apologetically, "but I want to set five red Henriettas, and a pair f shoes for a No. 1314 boy, with ruber heels and no toe nails-"

"The shoe department is on the seond floor, three sections from the ront, third aisle," said the soap lady, nd then she added to her next sighbor, the patent-medicine tady:

What fools men are!" Mr. Hunt shot away in the direcion of the elevator, only to be coror not running. Take the one at the what in the deace do I want with baby carriages?" roared Mr. Hunt. I'm looking for salt cellars, and red turkeys, and rubber-toed shoes with no heels on 'em."

"Salt cellars down in the basement, sar," said the boy, "and shoes on the second floor, three sections from the front-'

"Confound you, don't I know it?" eried Mr. Hunt, "and if you'd had the brains of a yellow hen you'd a let me out where I wanted to stop," "Didn't know where you wanted to stop, sar." "Well, I'll walk down to where I want to go," said Mr. Hunt, shaking the elevator dust from his feet and hurriedly going down the first flight of stairs he encountered. He brought up in the ladies' underwear department, and rushing at the dapper young salesman, who was flirting with a young woman in a red waist, he made known his wants. "I want some medium bright turkeys, and canvas and mazarine blue hooks and eyes, and humps, and some black ladies' stockings, No. 141/2, with rubber heels. And salt cellars, dozen of 'em. By Jove, I'll have enough of 'em this time."

"This is the ladies' underwear department." said the clerk, "show you ome corsets for 59 cents, marked down from 60 cents."

'What in the name of old Harry do you suppose I want of corsets? What do I care what they're marked down from? Good Lord! what a pack of dumb fools there is in this store! I'm after salt cellars, and-"

"The sait cellars are in the basement -fourth section from the front-take the elevator," said the clerk, and then he smirked at the young lady and remarked "Another fool of a husband shopping for his wife."

"Where's the turkeys and the Prussian blue?" roared Mr. Hunt.

"We don't carry paints in stock." said the clerk. "Go to Mulligan's, on Devon street."

Mr. Hunt rushed to the stairway. down which he tumbled two steps at a time, and landed in a corner where apparently all things came to an end a large apartment filled with welldressed ladies with very slim waists and very red cheeks. He rushed up to a tall, imposing specimen in a flaring

"Can you tell me, madam." said he. "where I can find the cream jars, and the Henriettas, and the stockings for black Indies, number fourteen and a-half, with no toe nails?"

"Good Lord!" cried a dapper little clerk in spectacles, "it's an escaped lunatic, and he's talking to a dummy! Dear me, we shall all be murdered and assassinated in our beds!"

"My good man," said the floor-walker, rising to the occasion like a hero, "come with me. Come right along with me-anything to keep him quiet,' he said, in a whisper, aside to the clerk. "it don't do to excite 'em-come right along with me. No trouble at all right this way," and he took Mr. Hunt by the arm and led him along toward the rear of the store, where two burly policemen were standing.

"Let go of my arm, you thundering little dude you!" cried Mr. Hunt, wrenching himself free. "I may be green in a blasted dry goods emporium, but I don't need any little bantam rooster to lead me round! I'm looking for Prussian blue, and fourteen and a-half needles, and some canvas-toed shoes, and-

"Officer, you'll have to take this poor fellow in charge," said the man who was convoying Mr. Hunt. "He is probably an escaped lunatic. He has been cavorting around this store for the branch in this state and elsewhere. past half hour, and he's as mad as a March hare!"

"You'd better keep your hands off from me," said Mr. Hunt, warningly, "I'm a peaceful citizen looking for red turkeys, and Henriettas with blue cambrics, and hump-eyed hooks number fourteen and a-half, and salt cellars, and mazarine blue-" "Good Lord, Jim." said one of the policemen to the other, "I do believe the fellow's trying to do some shopping for his wife!"

"You've hit the nail square on the head, captain," said Mr. Hunt, "trying to is the very word. I haven't bought thing yet. And I'll be everlastingly jiggered if I can see how it is that women stand it, and how they ever manage to find anything beats me! Yes. I've been trying to do some shopping for Polly. I'm wet with perspiration, and I'm tired as a fox hound."

"My good man," said the policeman. "I'm a married man. My wife's name is Betsy. I know just how it is, for I've been there. No matter what you've done, you're excusable."

"But what am I to tell Polly?" asked Mr. Hunt, wiping his hot forehead.

"Go home and tell her that you clean forgot all about it," said the friendly policeman. "She'll forgive you, for she probably knows that no man can go shopping, and she'll come herself.

Trust a woman for that." Hunt wrung the man's hand, and took the train for home, a sadder and wiser man.

"By Jove!" said he, as he put his latchkey in the door, "I'll never brag about my shopping qualities again. Polly, dear," and he kissed her fondly, "I know you'll feel awful aggravated with me, but you're little errands ronted with the sign: "This eleva- slipped entirely out of my mind. BEEF TRUST MUST GO

Head of Live Stock Association Defies It.

A MOST UNHOLY COMBINATION.

President Springer Tells Cattlemen They Should Kill and Market Their Own Product and Refuse to Sell to the Trust.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. Jan. 14.-President John W. Springer's attack upon the beef trust, so called, and the passage of memorials to congress urging that laws for the betterment of live stock conditions be enacted were the features of the first day's session of the sixth annual convention of the National Live Stock association. Presiident Springer, after declaring that "the American stockman proposes to take care of himself," served notice that those interests "must receive protection from the congress of the United States just as long as the finished products made from our raw material are heavily protected." The sentiments were received with applause. Mr. Springer said:

"Never before was such an unholy combination attempted. Not content with amassing colossal fortunes in the past two decades from the stock raisers of the west, these same packers now blossom out as would be dictators, The stockmen of the United States have over $4,000,000,000 working capital. If forced to do so, you can build packing plants of your own, kill your own stock, market the product and undersell any packing house trust.

"We have men outside this 'charmed circle' who have money, brains and energy, and with these three they also have hearts left in their physical anat omy. Let us pronounce sentence that if this merger is consummated it can operate its $500,000,000 merger without cattle, without sheep and without hogs, for we own the raw material, and we will refuse to sell to any packing house combine."

Mr. Springer strongly advocated the proposed bill to give the interstate commerce commission power to enforce its decrees, so that overcharges at stockyards or terminal charges on excessive railway shipping rate or unjust discrimination for or against a live stock market may be prevented.

Coal Famine In Kansas.

TOPEKA, Kan., Jan. 13.-The fuel situation grows alarming in Topeka. Two of the largest coal companies in the city report that they have not a pound of coal on hand with which to supply their orders and do not know when they will be able to get any. Packing houses and other institutions will have to close in two days unless the situation is relieved. The local gas company may have to close this week, as the works cannot secure coal to make gas. The street railway company has only a small supply of coal on hand. Other Kansas towns report practically the same situation.

Immense Coal Output.

READING, Pa., Jan. 12.-The Pennsylvania and Reading railroad officials Glass company of Pittsburg has proved claim that for the week just ended a failure. more anthracite coal was taken down the main line than for any previous week in years. That old copybook maxim finds its most forceful application in the waste of vitality, which is called "burning the candle at both ends." A woman often tempted beyond her strength by domestic or social demands. Some day she awakens from this waste of strength to the woeful want of it. She has become weak, nervous and miserable.

For weak, nervous, run-down women, there is no better tonic and nervine than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It restores the appetite, quiets the nerves and gives refreshing sleep. It cures local diseases peculiarly womanly which undermine the general health. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

THE FOUR D'a .- Charles Spurgeon once said that there were three great enemies to man--'dirt, debt and the devil." He might have added one more d and included dyspepsia. The evil results of this disease could hardly be exaggerated. It's effects are felt in mind and body, and are as far reaching as the effects of the curse that was laid on the Jackdaw of Rheims which was cursed in "cating and drinking and sleeping, in standing and sitting and lying." The good effects of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery are most marked in aggravated and chronic cases of dyspepsia. It enables the stomach glands to secrete the necessary quantity of digestive fluids, and this at once removes that craving or gnawing sensation so common to certain forms of indigestion. It tones and regulates the stomach, invigorates the torpid liver and gives the blood making glands keen assimilative power. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures ninety-eight per cent, of those who use it. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are superior to all other laxative medicines when the bawels are obstructed.

Keep on Your Own Side-

Because a Shamokin clergyman visited an invalid in a family attached to a congregation not his own and ingratiated bimself by many attentions, so that when the invalid died he presided over the funeral, while the regular family pastor was not made acquainted with the death, the Shamokin Ministerial Association adopted strong resolutions against the Presbytery. The document concludes:

"We consider it not courteous to visit, as pastors, members of other churches without first consulting the pastor of such members, and we hereby earnestly request the members of the various churches, when, on account of sickness or otherwise ther desire a minister's presence and offices, to call at once their own pastor."
