Every parent knows how to sympathize with the parents of the misguided school girl in a neighboring city in the grief which their daughter has brought upon them. At the same time it is impossible to overlook the fact that they seem to be in some measure responsible for their own trouble and their case points a moral which it is the duty of the newspaper to enforce.

This young girl, we are told in the dispatches, is 15 years old, a pupil in high school, and was much given to reading sensational fiction. Her parents were "eminently respectable," and their daughter had enjoyed all the advantages of a refined home. Last Friday she disappeared from her home, and the anxious inquiries made for her reveal the fact that she found in a travelling theatrical troupe a man who fills her ideal of a hero of romance.

The case of this girl is not an exceptional one. Every reader can re call others like it. The cause of her downfall is the same as is at work in thousands of households. The girl was permitted to fill her young imagination with false, delusive and unwholesome notions of human nature and human life, by reading the feverish stories that come from the Minerva press, and the flight from home and its direct consequences are the direct and legitimate result of the training she has been permitted to receive from the books and newspapers of that pernicious sort. Who is responsible? Plainly her parents, who should have taken both negative and positive measures of prevention; who should have taken pains to keep unwholesome books out of their young daughter's hands, and equal pains to place wholesome ones within her reach, that her taste for reading might be so profitably cultivated as to be a source of moral strength rather than of moral weakness.

That which is true in this case is true also in the case of all families in which there are children. Ours is a reading age, and our children will read something; it is for parents to take care that the things read shall be wholesome things. It is not enough that bad books shall be kept out of their hands; unless good books, entertaining books which are at the same time free from all manner of taint, are kept within the reach of the youth of our time, access to bad books cannot be prevented by merely repressive measures. Our large liberty of the press amounts pretty nearly to unbridled license, and books and newspapers are published, circulated and read, which are as positively pernicious to young readers as are the books which the law prohibits. Books of this unwholesome sort are sold on railway trains, kept in circulaing libraries, sometimes even in Sunday school libraries, and not infrequently are found upon center tables. They are not at all improper books in the common acceptation of the term, but merely intensely emotional ones melo-dramatic romances, but they are as pernicious to young and imaginative persons as if they were not scrupulously "proper" as they commonly

In a word, there are altogether too many novels and romances of the third and fourth and fifteenth rate printed and read, for the good of the public, and there are too few books of a more wholesome kind bought by heads of families generally. A good library in the house, a wise man has said, is in itself a liberal education to the children of the house; we may add that it is a moral character to them also; but the power of books to influence character and life is not by any means confined to good books: bad bocks and bad story papers-by which we mean simply unwholesomely exciting books and periodicals-are moral poisons in any house into which they come.-Ex.

WASHINGTON.

Washington, August 24, 1903 Most cautiously expressed, but not the less intense indignation, is general in the Navy Department because of recent events at Oyster Bay. Naval officers declare that the exposure of the entire North Atlantic squadron to the perils of a trip up the narrow Long Island Sound, followed by an attempt to manoeuvre the squadron off Oyster Bay, while three naval vessels were devoted to the special accommodation of the President and his friends and family, was a lagent referred to "a nuisance" and dent and his friends and family, was a humiliating and unwarranted use to which to put the army. They declare that every commanding officer's "heart was in his mouth" as he risked the almost inevitable accident and subsequent court-martial in guiding his agent referred to "a nuisance with a large capital, to be made. As a matter of fact, Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock instituted an investigation week. Secretary of the secretary of the Interior almost inevitable accident and subsequent court-martial in guiding his himself but on his arrival there he himself but on his arrival there he vessel over shoals and rocks in the benefit of his country, nor the greater efficiency of the navy, but that the President might have the gratification of imitating the German Emperor at whose beck and call are the vessels of the German navy.

As it happened, two vessels were interesting reading although it is unmore or less seriously damaged and likely that it will ever reach the although the Secretary of War and public. It is evident that the specula-Admiral Dewey, like accomplished tions and corruption practiced by courtiers, beiittled the damage, the government officials in Indian Terricost of repairs will not be inconsiderable. The cost of the trip together with the powder burned in firing presidential salutes is conservatively thousand dollars, look insignificent. estimated at $60,000, covering the expense for powder and coal alone. To the officers on the Sylph was confided the care of the Roosevelt children and their nursemaid, and, to their serious embarrassment, they are likely to be known to brother officers for all time, as the "day nurses to the Roosevelt youngsters." It is tele-graphed from Oyster Bay that "Mr. Roosevelt was happy and excited all day long," but there may be some people who will regard the President's happiness somewhat dearly bought at $100,000, which will have been expended by the time the injured vessels are placed in repair.

Reports from Providence and Oyster Bay depict a situation far from gratifying to the Republican leaders. The members of the Senate committee on Finance are determined to adhere to their original plan, a measure whereby the Secretary of the Treasury will be authorized to accept certain securities other than government bonds from the banks as collateral for government deposits. This legislation is earnestly desired by J. P. Morgan & Co, who are anxious to secure what would virtually amount to the government imprimature on certain of the bond in which it is their business to deal. The western members of Congress, including Speaker-to-be Cannon, cannot be converted to this form of legislation. The President has become so disguste! with the tenacity with which Senator Aldrich and his colleagues adhere to this type of legislation, regardless of the views of the western members, that he threatens to throw the entire matter overboard and issue a call for a special session to convene November 9, without mentioning the subject of financial legislation.

In view of the fact that the republicans have long boasted of their ability to harmonize all interests, the situation is most distressing to the republican leaders. Moreover, prominent democrats, like Senator Daniels of Virginia, are taking occasion to elaborate the fallacies of the Aldrich policy which is all for the bankers and the Wall street interests and not at all for the people, whose money is being accumulated in the treasury by All pensioners are cautioned to unnecessarily high taxes to an extent enough for all possible emergencies. To accomplish this, of course, would necessitate a reduction of the tariff schedules and that is what the Aldrich crowd dreads above all eise.
