THE GRANGE Conducted by J. W. DARROW, Press Correspondent New York State Grange GRANGE SOCIOLOGY.

The Subject Discussed by a Past Leeturer of New York State Grange. nin. [Special Correspondence.]

What is meant by the scelal benefits of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry? is a question often asked, and the reply has been just what the adjective indicates without further specification.

The philosophy of grange sociology has never received the attention if deserves until recently a western paper. an organ of that state grange, sent out this question to the members of each subordinate grange:

"Of the many benefits of your order which has appealed most strongly to you?"

Eight out of ten replied, "The social." Although at first thought the educa tional features may seem of paramount importance, yet we are inclined to be lieve the two are confused or so infimately blended as to form one integral part of the whole. The word social pertains to society, and both words come from the same Latin word, socius, meaning a companion.

Human beings, then, to be companionable must have the same interests, the same pleasures, the same benefits, the same happiness and the same social dutles. Kindly and intelligent social intercourse between its various members produces an organization bordering on the ideal. We are on the same plane of material and intellectual existence and are not contending with sharp contrasts of wealth or culture or pleasure Our labor, our pastimes, our sympathies, are identical. Still there are some difficulties to overcome.

One of the problems which this order set out to solve was the removal so far as possible of the isolation of farm life working with the materials at hand and without changing our mode of life Too long had the farmer kept his hands upon the handles of the plow, his eyes following the long, dark furrows he turned; too long had the farmers gonthe unending round of daily duties, the same yesterday, today, forever.

"Few things tend so effectually to dwarf the intellect and stunt the faculties as the incessant and long continued repetition of simple tasks," says Bowen, one of the finest writers of political economy. "This long continued and incessant repetition may give one the faculty of executing tasks quicker and better than others, but it will at the same time render one less fit for other pursuits physically and intellectually, and the whole being degenerntes.

We further aggravate this condition by insisting on a separation between intellect and labor. We insist one set of men shall do all the thinking and another set of men all the working, and then we call the thinkers gentlemen and the workers laborers, whereas the one should add labor to his thought, and the other should add thought to his labor, and both should be gentlemen in the best sense of the word.

The ploneer Patron recognized these conditions and incitly acknowledged bank barn and all other necessary farm outthis fact—that the first step toward a quickened Intellect and an enlarged understanding was; first, "to meet together;" second, "to talk together." and, lastly, "to work together for our mutual good and improvement, as ocension requires."

They sent abroad their influence from the realm of pure morality and considered man not as alone, not as in a separate condition, but as he is-one, of would that men should do to you do ye even so to them.

The general law of the social functions' demands accipracity. We must not only get from, but give to, this organization; and he who comes into the Order from purely selfish motives will receive the least.

We are bound together by mutual wants and interests, and no one may say to another, "I have no need of thee." The law of kindness demands we do that good to others which repays or requites by an acknowledgment the good that has been done to us.

Our debt may be for money, for la bor, for kind deeds or kind words. A sympathizing look or a smile may have most touchingly obliged us and must be repaid by other good deeds in return. The law demands charity which involves a universal good will and a disposition to rejoice when others are made happy through its instrumental ity. It may not always approve of the moral character or conduct of its beneficiaries, yet it regards them as human beings with like powers of suffering and like needs of relief.

Thus we find in the social features the relative duties of mankind.
