ORCHARD EXPERIMENTS.

A Prominent Granger's Methods of Establishing Orchards.

George T. Powell of Ghent, N. Y., a prominent member of the Order and formerly the head of the school of practical agriculture at Briar Cliff Manor, N. Y., is conducting some valuable experiments on his "Orchard Farm" relative to establishing orchards and their care. His practice has been in recent years to purchase trees of strong vigor like the Northern Spy on which choice varieties have been top worked. He has practiced the selection of buds and their grafting for afteen years. Two thousand trees were planted last spring, all of which were top worked by selecting buds from the choicest bearing trees from orchards in various sections of the country. Mr. Powell is a believer in heading down trees, starting them within eighteen inches of the ground. The chief reasons for this are to better meet the conflict with the San Jose scale, the greater ease in thinning out the fruit on low headed trees and their advantage in case of severe storms. He also favors the introduction of dwarf trees. He has imported a very choice English variety known as the Cox Orange Pippin. Mr. Powell keeps the soil in his orchards in a high state of cultivation by plowing under clover

PROFESSOR W. G. JOHNSON.

A Prominent Candidate For Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

Professor W. G. Johnson of New York is the most prominent candidate for assistant secretary of agriculture under consideration at Washington at this writing. He is the managing ed-Hor of the American Agriculturist and is widely and favorably known throughout the country.

He was born on a farm in Plain township, Franklin county, O., July 4, 1806. In due time he took a course in the Ohio State university and later at Cornell and then postgraduate course in the Leland Stanford university of California. He was later appointed to a professorship on the faculty of the University of Illinois and left that position to become state entomologist of Maryland. He was one of the five Americans who were awarded gold medals at the Paris exposition for both practical and scientific work in agriculture. He is a member of several agrialso of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry. He is an interesting public speaker, and his services are in great demand at conventions in the speaker. demand at conventions, institutes and grange meetings.

Agriculture In Rural Schools.

The study of agriculture in its rudiments in our rural schools is one of the pressing demands of the times. It is a question that will not down. It is one with which the grange can deal, and the grange must agitate the reform until it has been accomplished. As H. E. Cook well says in an exchange, the Order has never in its history approved and pushed any just cause that was not finally granted by our executive and lawmaking bodies. This is a just and righteous cause, and when this strong organization gets squarely behind the proposition with something like a definite scheme, sufficiently worked out and concretely presented, then will agriculture be a part of the rural school curriculum. A suggestion may be added that our labor unions adopt the fundamental grange principle of education. The grange originally made a strong effort to build upon petty financial savings, but failed. When education became the watchword all other things were added thereto. If, therefore, trade unions would begin a systematic organtzed demand for industrial training in the city schools and thus co-operate with the grange in the co-ordinate request for agriculture in the rural schools, we should soon revolutionize the social and industrial life of our commonwealth.

The Ideal Fair.

While many of the old time agricultural fairs are drifting away from their original purpose, the turn of the wheel brings us to the grange fairs, which in many instances are now the ideal agricultural fair. Managed with slight expense, they bring out genuine sociability and instruction in a way that is extremely profitable.

Buckeye grange, Medina county, O., has purchased a schoolhouse to be used for a grange hall. The schoolhouse was in the market because of centralization of schools in the town-

It is profitable as well as enjoyable to occasionally hold day meetings of the grange at the homes of some of the members.

Five past masters of state granges have died this year.
