WASHINGTON

From our Regular Correspondent. Washington, D. C., Sept. 28, 1908.

The President is again and for the last time, it is said, in the National Committee. He is regard-White House and interest again centers in and about that historic mansion, for it is now occupied even in this presidential year by a even in this presidential year by a party. They are both to all appearances under a dark cloud. general public than any of the can-didates. Although he is bronzed by the outdoor life at Sagamore Hill, the President looks a bit careworn and tired at the end of his vacation. It has been the busiest ing material. boliday period that he has passed in many years and the strain of the campaign has made itself felt. The number of visitoss at his country mined to run amuck in the present home this summer was the largest duting his seven years in the office ol president. The contest about nication. His strictures will be mistake, saying that I had read interests. the nomination of Governor Hughes occupied much of the President's time and that struggle was only opinion that Governor Haskell will part of the greater one which he is making to bring about the election the President and vindicate himself of Mr. Taft. As soon as that election is over, Mr. Roosevelt will turn his attention to the big game hunting trip in Africa which he has had in view for nearly a vear.

When the President alighted from the special train at the Union Station in this city, he found himself surrounded by a number of members of his cabinet. He greeted them most cordially and was specially demonstrative toward Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor who, with Mrs. Straus was one of the first to get the President's hand. He called Secretary Wilson of the Agricultural Department "Dear old Nestor" and Postmaster General, ex-ambassador to Russia Meyer, "My dear George." The Postmas-ter General, who is credited with cabinet, complimented the President on his letter in the morning newspapers arraigning Senator Foraker and Governor Haskell of Oklahoma. After the greetings were President, who had on each side of him one of his military aides, Col. Bromwell and Capt. Butt and was encircled by the secret service men, walked to where the carriages were waiting outside.

Hitchcock, but it is within the knowledge of well informed persons that Mr. Hitchcock from now on will in a degree be obliged to take advice from older statesmen, including Mr. Roosewelt. It is understood that the President is returning to Washington earlier than is customary in order to facilitate conferences with campaign leaders where he will be more accessible than he was at Oyster Bay. The President has made engagements with a number of distinguished politicians, leaders of his party, to meet him at the White House within the next few days and Chairman Hitchcock is expected among them. It is a fact that the management of Mr. Hitchcock has not been entirely satisfactory to the Republican candidate, and it is also true that Mr. Roosevelt was more anxious than Mr. Taft concerning the complaints of party leaders with reference to
