International Bible Lesson for Oct. 31, '09-(Acts 27: 1-26).

SEA VOYAGES.

A sea voyage is a memorable experience. It is an event to be anticipated with roseate dreams, and to be remem bered with pleas urable emotions. From time immemorial, the deepest interest to the dwellers this planet. on Lure of the Sea.

Its all-encompassing embrace, its mystery, its calms, its storms, its restless motion, its heaving tides its eternal secrets have allured and baffled the minds of men. Mythology has peopled its depths with sods and goddesses: ignorance and superstition have made it the abode of entrancing sirens and seductive mermaids. Artists have raved over it, poets have ung its praises, scientists have write ten learnedly of its value, explorers have pushed their prows into its bays and inlets, or dropped their sounding lines and dredges into its fathomiess depths, commerce has whitened its bosom with the sails of its merchantmen, and countless multitudes have pitched their tents upon its beach in search of health and vigor, or, crowded its floating palaces of light, which by day and by night, pant their way through its healing waters.

The Bible is full of references to A. the sea, and some of its most drama- Isan tic incidents relate to that natural wonder, David, who perhaps never saw the ocean in a storm, in one of his Psalms has one of the most vivid descriptions of a mid-ocean hurricane that has ever been penned. One of the books of the Old Testament. around which the flercest criticism has centered, deals with the interrupted voyage of a preacher on the storay Mediterranean, and no more accurate and vivid story of a shipwreek was ever written than the account, by the Amanuensis Luke, of the foundering of the corn ship off the Island of Melita, on which the aposite Paul was being conveyed, a prisoner to Rome,

Up to this time Paul had been a land traveler. On foot, he had tramped all over Asla, with only ocrasional excursions by water on short tring from shore to shore, but his appeal to Caesar, at his fareical trial at Caesarea, made it necessary that he should appear at the capital at Rome. That meant a long and dangerous voyage in the winter season through a cas ewant by equiportial storms, in merchant vessels, and any and every sort of crazy craft, whose owners dared or could be persuaded to take the risk of tempest and breakers.

Ancient and Modern Ships.

In these days of swift ships and modern improvements a voyage to Europe is about as pleasant at one season as another. The accommodations are palatial, every comfort and juxury of life is provided, every wish is gratified, there is instant and constant communication with the bendspheres ahead and astern, the news of the world is found at the breakfast table in a newspaper damp from the press, and it is only a little matter of four days and a half from the shore of America to the shore of Europe, 3,000 miles apart. But Paul had no such conveniences on his historic voyage, 2.000 years ago. He was a prisoner under guard of a Roman soldier. The fare was of the coarsest, the accommodations were of the poorest, herded with the imperial prisoners from all parts of the empire, being transported to the capital to answer for their crimes, ro consideration was shown the man whose name was destined to endure forever; in hunger, cold, and weariness this distinguished prisoner took his Mediterranean voyage from Caesarea to Rome.

Personal Influence.

And yet before that voyage was ended, that solitary man, little, and prematurely old, was providentially put into a position, where his personality and influence, permeated and controlled the whole situation. In the midst of a fourteen days' cyclonic tempest, the captain lost his head, the sailors were panic-stricken, the soldiers were ready to assassinate their prisoners, riot and utter absence of discipline prevailed. At that juncture, when all hope of being saved had expired in every breast, this landlubber, unknown and unskilled in sea craft, assumed command of the ship, put heart into the hopeless, by his calmness soothed the panic of the hysterical, and stopped their attempts to abandon the passengers, gave directions about life-preserving methods when the ship struck the beach and began to go to pieces under the pounding of the waves, and by his christian fortitude, calm trust, chcerful words, sensible directions, and general, all-around manhood brought passengers and crew all safe to land without the loss of a soul.

Textile Goods Out of Wood.

In Germany, Spain and Holland tex tile goods are made out of wood, and it is probable that this industry will soon spread to France. The process consists in making the wood pulp pass directly through a metallic place with a number of slits, resulting in the formation of thin ribbons, which pass from the slited plate directly to machine which twists them, transforming them into very regular thread of any desired size. The wood fiber threads thus produced go by the names of xyloline, silvaline and licella; they are classified by number like the other threads in use. Mixed with hemp threads, they have been used to make towels. These mixed fabrics readily admit of washing, dyeing and printing; the wood-pulp thread, which grows weak when wet. regains its resistance when dried .---Brooklyn Eagle.

"In that corner," he said, "was a cupboard where the bandages were kept; it is now plastered over, but they are probably still there." And he took a poker, broke down the plaster and found them. From this "find" the two men contracted the disease, and it spread through the town and worked fearful havoc.
