

David's Waterloo

"Less noise, please, children." The new teacher was pale, but she stood very erect and assumed the dignity that she was far from feeling.

"O-h-h!" he gasped excitedly under his breath. It was just as he had hoped and expected. "O-h-h!" he gurgled in a voice that quivered to shiveriness.

The new teacher had a strong desire to clutch the orange-headed boy by the shoulder. Instead, she held her hand tighter behind her back, and though her lips were white she smiled on.

Still smiling she met the eyes of the overgrown boy in the back corner seat. They were taunting, reddish brown eyes. The boy's jaw set a little tighter as he doggedly met the gaze of the new teacher.

She smiled very sweetly. The reddish brown eyes began to stare in amazement. Presently the tattoo stopped short, and the boy's freckled face was dyed a shamed red.

"Why did you stop, David?" the new teacher asked. "I was enjoying it so much. You keep time beautifully. How did you learn? Did any one teach you?"

"David," she went on, "shall I tell you a story about a little drummer?" "Shall I tell the story, and will you all be very quiet if I do?" she asked.

The rest of the children, who up till now had looked solemn, as if they were reserving their decision till they saw who came out victor, shouted "Yes!" with unabashed curiosity.

Very simply the new teacher told the story of Napoleon's drummer boy at Moscow. During the telling she had made a point not to look at the reddish brown eyes.

"The boy was sixteen, David, just as old as you are," she said when the story was ended. Glancing carelessly at the boy she saw that the ugliness and discontent had been smoothed out of his face.

"Gee!" the boy had been thinking. "The new teacher has a funny way with a feller. The last teacher always made you stay in from recess for a hull month, when you broke the rulers a purpose an' beat on 't' desk. An' it used to get her just wild, too, 'cause she had to stay there an' watch him."

The new teacher was different. She had told him the bluestest story and smiled at him and had told him that he was a swell drummer, and maybe some day if he learned his lessons he'd be a drummer, too, in a big army, like the kid in the story, and get a shot in the head, and have to march all day with a rag tied around him, and maybe some one would write a poem about him, too.

"David," the voice went on, while the boy was still too confused to look at her, "if you'll bring those pieces of ruler to me, I'll keep them for you in my desk, and then maybe you'll be good enough to beat taps for us some times when we finish lessons. I'll put them right in here, where they'll be perfectly safe, and I'll lock my desk to-night."

She held out her hand expectantly. It was a whiter hand and a smaller hand than David had ever seen before. Awkwardly he stumbled from his seat and slouched toward the desk. Then he carefully put the pieces of ruler into the new teacher's outstretched hand.

The orange-haired boy turned about and gave a grunt of disapproval at his fallen hero, who was sitting with his eyes fixed moodily on the new teacher. She was still smiling at something lurking in her mind; but the reddish brown eyes still thought the smile was meant for him.

Life in London.

Three hundred thousand Londoners live in one-room tenements with three or more occupants. The death rate of the London districts in which a million people are housed is not so well as horses is four times higher than normal. But London is not the only plague spot of England.

NORTH POLE HAT A WONDER

It is Made of Fuzzy Drawn Fur, is Two Feet High and Has Snow Effect.

Chicago.—Dr. Cook and Commander Peary, struggling against the icy blasts of the great north and the more subtle danger of the food tin, little thought of the fame that was to be theirs when they reached the top of the world.

The hat is suggestive of the polar region. It seems as high as the cartoonist's picture of the pole, although in reality it is only two feet tall. It is constructed of brown fur, fuzzy and expensive. It is just such a hat as the explorer might have drawn over his head when the wind blew cold, and it looks massive and solid enough to supply a good soup stock in case of Arctic exigency. Further heightening its chilly effect is a snowlike spray of algrette highly on the left side.

The president of the National Association of Retail Milliners is the designer of the hat.

COLLIE COMMITS SUICIDE.

Prefers Death in the Country to Life in Philadelphia.

Caldwell, N. J.—A dog belonging to Herman Fritz Weinbeck of Philadelphia, whose family spend the summer in West Caldwell, rather than return to the city with his owner, committed suicide by walking in front of an automobile. The family occupied a furnished cottage in Westville avenue, and started for home. The dog, a young Scotch collie, named Dash, had enjoyed romping through the fields and woods here, and when the trunks were loaded on a wagon Dash was called to accompany the family to the railroad station.

Each member of the family in turn coaxed Dash to leave the cottage, but without avail. Finally the dog received a whipping. With tail between his legs Dash went to the sidewalk and, seeing an automobile coming, walked deliberately in front of it and was killed. Dash by his kind disposition made many friends in the neighborhood, especially among the children, and could not bear to go away from them and the green fields.

WORKS AT AGE OF 101.

Upstate Woman Bakes Cake for Birthday Guests.

Auburn, N. Y.—Mrs. Luella Treat Witherell, of the village of Troop, celebrated her 101st birthday a few days ago. Her figure is straight and her health excellent, and although she suffers slightly from deafness and wears glasses, Mrs. Witherell does her own washing and ironing and assists in the general housework at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. F. Treat, seventy-one years old.

To show that a century has not impaired her cooking ability, Mrs. Witherell baked a big cake and entertained members of the Methodist Church of Port Byron. She has always lived a simple country life, and dislikes the city. She was born in Cicero.

Pathos in a Fire Report.

In the annual report of the fire marshal of Kentucky the following extract is not without a suggestion of "Little Boy Blue":

"Among the odds and ends of the attic, usually are vanished furniture, rags smeared with grease to take fire themselves, painting oils liable to take fire when the sun beats on the roof, and broken toys of children who are grown and gone away, or who went to sleep long ago."
