CHEMICAL AFFINITY.—This law in thembity is remarkably illustrated in the restoration of the equilibrium between the supply and waste in diseased asimal matter, through the agency of the celebrated Gracuito Oil. It is well known that chemical action takes place only under certain circumstances: that some bodies have no tendency to unite chemically, and that others strongly influence each others properties. The former areast to have not approximators is merely mechanical, and no change takes place. The latter class of bodies, in which is included the Garging Oil to the continuation of the former areas of the continuation of morbid animal matter, and by their affinity for each other, their action being productive of chemical phenomena, and the properties of one or both are altered. Hence to the strong affinity of the continuation of the Garging Oil to unnee with the elements of the matter, fray he referred the henceficial influence serviced over so srent a variety of diseases, most of which were considered as nourable.

THERE never was a remedy discovered, by the ingenu ity of mun, for removing discases from Horses, that equalled Colewan's Heave 'owers, in curing that most trouble-mose, obstinate and dangerous complaint. If a case is at all curable, these powders will just as surely remove it as they are taken. This is no fiction, as many of the most respectable persons in different parts of the country, contestify from netual trial. One, two or three bottles at most, is all that is necessary to cure the worst cases and recent case; and also in cough and where the wind has been injured, one bottle will be found of great service.
