This expression forcibly reminds us of the anxiety man ifested by many, rery many of our Whig friends to have us lampoon Gen. Reed for the failure of the Eric Bank. "Hit him again-he's got no friends," say they all-"why don't you give him more," says one-"now 's your vou expose the rottenness and corruption of the swindhing concern," chimes in a fourth, and so on, ad infinitum. Had we obeyed all these friendly promptings, and unbridled our will and pen, the General would have caught some, we have no doubt. But we had a higher duty to perforn to the public, than to gratify our own or any other man's private feelings of revenge. We said from time to time what we thought the occasion demand-cil—in fact, we were disposed to throw the mantle of charity, (which we know will cover a multitude of sins,) over the whole concern, in the hope-vain, we now admit-that conciliation would induce him to do justice to the innocent and confiding bill-holders. That we have incurred the partial displeasure of some of our political associates thereby, we are aware—that we have even been accused of being bought by the General's gold, (which, by the by, he could use more to his credit in paying his debts,) we are also aware-but conscious of the correctness of our course, we have disdained to either repel or deny the street attacks of friends or foes. The excitement having now partially subsided, we trust that those who have differed with us-who have made false accusations against us-will calmly review our course, and do us justice. It is a truism, but no less pertinent in the present instance, that it is a too common practice of the readers of a newspaper, to abuse the Editor whenever they happen to disagree with him on questions of local or political policy. Like some of our whig friends in reference to Gen. Reed, they are ready to exclaim, "Hit him ngain—he's got no friends." They do not stop to think that what he writes and publishes, he does so over his own signature, and is personally and pecuniarily responsible. They forget that he has other interests and feelings to consult besides theirs—that he writes, selects and publishes to please the many instead of the few who, from locality, can reach his ear. They also forget that an Editor capable of conducting a paper, when he needs advice, will call for it, therefore their well-meant interference is unnecessary; and that they may advise one who is not capable, from now till doomsday, and he will be incapable still. We mean this in no unkind feelings-we certainly desire to offend no one-but we must say we have been "button-haled" lately, a little more than has been pleasant to ourselves, or, we are inclined to believe, profitable to others. And now, if there are any who do not like the plain manuer in which we have spoken, let them imagine twenty or thirty disinterested friends daily advising them how they should conduct their business, and they will have some faint idea of our position. But it may be urged that an Editor is a public mouth-piece-a kind of pubavind him up with patronage or countenance, may dictate. our position is not very dissimilar.

WHIG FALSEHOODS.-It is strange that whig Editors learn nothing by experience. They lied Gen. Jackson into the Presidency-they performed the same service for Mr. Van Buren, and they materially forwarded the prospect of Mr. Polk in the same way-and now they seem determined to do the same kind of office for Gen. Cass. Scarce a week has clapsed since his nomination, and they are already engaged in their vocation. The Fredonia Censor leads off with the assertion that he is -that his location in the very heart of that interest would 14c on wheat to Albany. 13' Lieut. T. Mayne Reid, better known as "the Poor Scholar," is now in New Orleans-in spite of the numerous rumors of his death. He is attached to the regiment of New York Volunteers, and highly distinguished himself in the battles before the city of Mexico.

Man's Mission-God has written upon the flowers that sweeten the air-on the breeze that rocks the the sprig of moss that lifts its head in the descrideep chamber-upon every pencilled shell that sleeps in the caverne of the deep, no less than upon the mighty sun that warms and cheers millions of creafures that live in its light-upon his works he has written, "None of us liveth to himself." And probably were we wise enough to understand these works, we should find there is nothing, from the cold stone in the earth, or the minutest creature that breathes-which may not, in some way or other, minister to the happiness of some living creature. We admire and praise the flower that best answers bears fruit the most rich and abundant; the star that is most useful in the heaven we admire the most, And is it not reasonable that man, to whom the whole creation, from the flower up to the spangled heavens, all minister-man who has power of conferring deeper misery and higher happiness than any being on earth-man, who ean act like God if he will: is it not reasonable that he should live for the noble O.
