CAMERON COUNTY PRESS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 1899.

6

WEE FANNIE.

Wee Fannie, bless her little heart, I cannot help but take her part, When romping through the halls; Up, down the stairs she runneth wild, This sweet, angelic baby child, Fast clinging to her dolls.

What mem'ries doth her laughter bring, When through the house I hear it ring, In fond, ecstatic glee; Old scenes arise before mine eyes Of children up beyond the skles, Who're calling after me.

I gaze upon her broken toys, Which tell me of true childish joys, The joys of baby years; And while into the past I drift, The ills and aches of life I sift From out a vale of tears.

Such purity from children roll The every hardened soul That lacks the gem of grace: Their volce, their smile, their very tear, Can drive away the dread of fear, Depicting Christ's own face.

Play on, my child, in rapture play, And may your life be one glad day Of endless bilss and peace; And after evening shadows fall, When quietness reigns throughout each ball

May joy your sleep increase. -George McKenzie, in Boston Budget.

[Copyright, 1897, by Longmans, Green & Co.]

SYNOPSIS.

SYNOPSIS. Chapter I-D'Auriac, commanding out-post where scene is laid, tells the story. De Gomeron has been appointed by Gen. de Rone to examine into a charge made against him. Nicholas, a sergeant, brings in two prisoners, a man and a woman, who are from the king's camp at Le Fere, D'Auriac, angered by Insulting manner of de Gomeron toward the woman, strikes him. A duel follows, and during the commotion the prisoners escape. De Rone happens on the disorderly scene, and d'Auriac, upon glving his parole not to attempt escape. hears this remarkable sentence: "Do-mor-row...you must die on the field. Win or lose, ff I catch you at the close of the day. I will hang you as high as Haman." Chapter II-D'Auriac next morning takes his place as usual on de Rone's staff. In the course of his ride over the field he saves victim of de Gomeron's malice, is found in imminent danger of almost instant death. Chapter III-After the battle in which King Henry utterly routs de Rone's forces, d'Auriac, lying severely wounded, sees the forms of a man and woman moving under cover of the night among the dead and wounded. They find a golden collar on de Leyva's corpse and Babette stabs Mauginot (her partner) to gain possession of the prize. After this hideous scene Henry with a retinue, among whom is the fair prisoner who had escaped from the hand of de Gomeron, rides over the field. Chapter IV-D'Auriac in the hospital of Ste. Genevieve discovers his unknown ris him dally, and when he is well enough is taken to her Normandy chateau. Here he learns from Maitre Palin, the madame's chaptain, that the king is about to force upon the woman a very distasteful mar-riage with M. d'Ayen. With Jacques, his staken to her Normandy chateau. Here he learns from Maitre Palin, the madame's chaptain, that the king is about to force upon the woman a very distasteful mar-riage with M. d'Ayen. With Jacques, his shoe. This causes a delay at village of Ezy, where he comes upon Nichoias, his dia prise about

of treason brewing among de Gomeron an

of treason brewing among de Gomeron and certain associates against the king. Chapter VI-Led by Nicholas, d'Aurlac goes by night to where de Gomeron is sta-tioned. When near the house a horn was was heard from the depths of the forest lwhich greatly frightens Nicholas, then some men leave courtyard in direction of the sound.

CHAPTER VI .-- CONTINUED.

The men rode by us slowly, one of them earrying a torch, and, taking a turn to the right, trotted off into the forest, cursing the orders they had re-ceived to go forth after the hornwinder.

"Now," I whispered, "for the dow."

'We must get to the terrace," he an swered. "From there it might be done," and with a hurried look behind him, at which I began to laugh in a low true of meckery, he crawled forward rapidly. I followed with equal speed and caution, and in a half minute we had gained the shadow of the terrace, and, working along its ivy-covered wall, got to the main bulding. Here we cast about for some means to get up. It was not possible to do this by holding sible foothold, and to my delight found it rest at once on a small projecting ledge that ran around the terrace. The remainder of my task was easy, and the next moment I found myself lying flat on my face beneath the oriel window.

Here I paused to recover myself, peering down at Nicholas, who was making an attempt to raise himself by his hands to reach the monograms and climb to me. "Steady," I whispered, "and catch this." Rapidly unwinding a silken sash I wore round my waist, in the fashion I had learned when serving in Spain, I dropped one end toward him and after a moment or two he managed to seize it. Then I looped a fold of the cilk around a buttress of the parapet, and holding on to the other end told Nicholas to climb. "Now for the window," I said. "I will rise slowly and find out what I can. You keep your pistol ready, and your eves open-do not rise, and remember orders." my

"There is a broken pane to the left, it is half hidden by the curtain—you can hear and see from there."

As he said this I rose softly to my feet and, finding the broken pane without any difficulty, peered in. The room was bright with the light of candles, and, at a table, covered with papers, were seated two men, whilst a third was standing, and pointing with his fingers at a scroll. In the man with his back to me I had no difficulty in recognizing de Gomeron, the one look ing toward me was assuredly Biron, for his was a face that once seen could never be forgotten. As for the man who was standing beside him, I knew him not, though subsequently-but I antic ipate. Biron was evidently in a high stat of excitement. He was biting at the end of his dark mustache, and the finger of his hand were playing nervously with the star on his breast, whilst his shifty, treacherous eyes were turning now or de Gomeron, now on the figure stand-ing at his elbow. He seemed to be hesitating, and I heard de Gomeron say: "This is my price-not money, no land, not a title, but only a few words You have each one, my lord, your share of the spoils set down in writing. I do not want so much even-all I ask is your word of honor to favor my suit with the king. For me the word of Biron is enough, and I know his majes ty can refuse you nothing." "My God!" exclaimed Biron, and writhed in his chair.

"The marshal might give me the promise I seek, Lafin," and de Gomeron turned to the man who was standing at Biron's elbow, "the word will give me a wife, not much of a reward." "And the lands of Bidache and Pe louse-eh?"

I almost fell forwards in my eager ness to hear, and only checked myself in time. "Exactly," sneered de Gomeron. "Do you think I have risked my life for the good of my health? See here, cheva-lier," and he bent forward and whispered a word or so that made the other pale, and then de Gomeron leaned back in his chair and smiled. Biron did not apparently see or hear, his forchead was resting on his clasped hands, and he seemed to be revolving the hazare of some great step. As for me, I though I caught the words, "your instant help," followed by "lances" and "pow-er," and guessed—I was not wrong hat the captain had forced Lafin' hand. "My dear de Gomeron." he said. "the marshal is willing enough, but you know the common talk, that the king has other views for madame, and that M. D'Ayen—" But Biron interposed. "M. de Gomeron, you ask too much Mme. de la Bidache is of the first nobilty. Tremouille was my friend. It is

"And I give monseigneur a crown. "Peste! My lord-after all, M. d My lord-after all, M. de Gomeron has deserved his price-and a good sword and a better head must not be thrown away. Remember, monseigneur, an open hand makes faithful hearts," said Lafin. "But the king would never consent," egan Biron.

"Give me your word to help me, moneigneur, I will do the rest for myself." "Give it, my lord."

There was no answer, and the Italian continued: "I suppose I must give it; make your minds easy. It is all over-she died last night." "Did it hurt her?" asked Biron, nerv ously "I don't know," answered Zamet, brually, "I have never tasted the Borgia itron myself."

"Mon Dieu! exclaimed the marshal, springing to his feet, "this is too terrible," and he began to pace up and down, whilst the other three remained in whispered converse, their eves now nd again turning to Biron, who walked the room like a caged beast. Nicholas had risen slowly to his feet despite my orders, and was looking over my shoulders with a white face and blazing eves dared not tell him to go back; with a warning look at him strained my ears to catch what was being said, but could hear nothing until at length Zamet raised his voice: "Have done with t, marshal, and sign. After all, Mme de Beaufort was no more than a and he used a foul word. "The king is prostrate now; but in a week Gabrielle will be forgotten, and then anything might happen. He already writes might happen. He already writes verses on her," he went on with a grin. "Charmante Gabrielle-diavolo! but you should have seen her as she lay dead-she was green as a jade cup." "Be still, dog," and Biron turned flercely on him. The Italian stepped back, his hand on his dagger; but moment he recovered himself. His black eyebrows lifted, and his upper lip lrew back over his teeth in a sneer.

"I did not know monseigneur would be so affected; but time presses and we need the name of Biron to that scroll. Hand the marshal the pen, Lafin." "It is here," and de Gomeron, dipping nen in a silver inkstand, held it out in is hand.

Biron made a half step forward to ake it when a thing happened. myself suddenly thrust aside, there was blinding flash, a loud report, and a hout from Nicholas: "Missed, by shout from Nicholas: God!'

There was absolutely no time to do anything but make for the horses. Nicholas had fired at de Gomeron in his mad thirst for revenge, and had prac-tically given our lives away. In the uproar and din that followed we slid down the sash like apes, and dashed toward the horses. Some one should "Traitor—traitor!" and let fly at us wice as we ran across the open space from the courtyard we could hear the hurry and bustle of men suddenly aroused, and as we reached the oak we heard the bay of the bloodhounds and the thunder of hoofs in pursuit.

FELT MYSELF SUDDENLY THRUST ASIDE

CHAPTER VII.

POOR NICHOLAS.

From the oak to the spot where our torses were tethered was close upon 50 aces, and never, I think, was ground covered at a speedier rate by men run ning for their lives. I was bursting with anger, and know not what re-strained me from pistoling Nicholas, so furious was I at the blind folly of the As we reached the horses we man. could hear the dogs splashing through the spill water at the edge of the lake, and some one fired a third shot at us from horseback, a shot in the dark, which whistled through the branches out to Nicholas. "It's a mile yet to the river, mon-sieur," he answered, slackening pace slightly to allow me to get alongside of him. The ill will I felt toward Nicholas had gone by this time. He had borne himself like a brave man, as he was, and, after all, if I had been in his position, I would perhaps have done the same, and let drive at de Gomeron at sight.

Out of it at last!" I gasped "Ouf!

We came to a narrow natch now, and rode down this, the river being in sight, winding, like a silver ribbon thrown carelessly down. On the opposite bank it was overhung with willows, whose drooping boughs swung low to the very surface of the water. Here and there the stump of a felled tree stood up like a sentinel. In the distance behind us we could hear one or two of the troop who had by this time managed to ers, get through the wood, yelling and shouting as they urged their horses to ward the river. Doubtless more would soon follow, and I cursed them loudly and heartily. Nicholas looked back. "But 15 yards of a swim, monsieur, and we are safe."

"Not exactly-see there!"

The sergeant followed my stretched blade and swore, too.

Right before us two men galloped out of a strip of coppice that stretched to the water's edge and cut us off from the stream. "Sacrebleu! How did they know that cut-have at them, monsieur.' And we did.

It had to be a matter of moments only. The troopers behind were coming on, and if once they reached us we could not well hope to escape again. The odds were too many. I did not, therefore, waste time, but went straight for my man, and, to do hIm justice, he seemed nothing loath to meet me. He cut over the shoulder, and, receiving this on my forte, I gave him the point in the center of his breastplate, making it ring like a bell. Only a Milanese corselet could have saved him as it did. My nag went on. but turned on its haunches to the reins, and before he could well recover himself I was at him again and discovered that he wore a demi-mask on his face.

"Monsieur, shall I prick your mask off before killing you," I mocked, suiting the words to a thrust that all but effected the object, and ripped him on the cheek.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Napoleon in Peter's Bed.

Peter the Great hated Moscow, and above all, that stronghold of oriental intrigue and moral darkness, the Krem-If I remember right, he never inin. habited the palace within its walls after he was a child. The old palace is a net-work of incredibly small, low, ill-ventilated rooms, some little bigger than closets, painted in greens, blues and reds, after the Swedish fashion; rooms which seem, even to-day, to reek of plots, intrigue and murder. Napoleon, always a trifle theatrical, insisted on sleeping in the bed of Peter the Great when he occupied the Kremlin in 1812. The bed of the boy Peter fitted the hero of Austerlitz to a nicety. It is a very abbreviated couch. In the very heart of this oriental palace, with no window which gives on the outer day and the open air, is the terem, or women's quarters. The terem was, to all intents and purposes, a harem. The ladies, even the tsaritza and the sisters of the tsar, were only permitted to look down into the hall of coronation through a carved wooden lattice, just as ladies do in every harem in the cast. They received no men except their husbands and brothers, and when they went out it was in a curtained litter. When Peter mounted the throne of the tsars the women of Russia were orientals, imprisoned far more rigorously than the ladies of Constantinople to-day.-Louisville Courier-Journal.

Travelers of Two Nations.

Nothing is so curious and instructive as to observe the Englishman when traveling in comparison with the Frenchman. The former is calm, punctual, precise, and with only the necesthat, precise, and that says a will say quantity of baggage. He will journey through China with merely a valise. He is not impatient. He loyee

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL. John D. Rockefeller, despite his milions, carries a plain, cheap silver watch given him when he was a boy.

Of all New York's millionaires Corne-lius Vanderbilt is said to be the most ensitive to criticism, particularly critcism in print.

A railroad accident 20 years ago de prived Henry Wendhoff, a millionaire f Mauch Chunk, Pa., of arms and legs He wears four artificial limbs.

Gen. H. W. Lawton, of Santiago fame is a collector of army autographs and has the signature of several hundred of the most famous soldiers of our army.

The London Optician says that great men are usually blue-eyed, and in-stances Shakespeare, Socrates, Locke, Bacon, Milton, Goethe, Franklin, Napoleon. Bismarck, Gladstone, Huxley, Virchow and Renan.

One of the best puns ever made was by Sydney Smith, on hearing a little girl say "partridges" for "patriarchs," while reading aloud. "She is deter-mined to make game of the patriarchs," said the witty divine.

Among the California volunteers who vere sent to Manila is an officer with a terrible mustache, which hides half his face. "It's not fair to fight the Span iards with that officer," said Dewey 'He's in ambush all the time."

Hetty Green's inside pocket is always lined with lucre, and she has more available cash at her disposal than any other woman in the United States. recently loaned a little wad of $1,000, 000 to the city of New York, at two pe cent. interest, for three months.

HIS ONLY PRACTICAL JOKE.

An Old Man's Reminiscence of One His Boyhood's Most Painful Experiences.

The apples and cider and the genial warmth of the glowing coal fire caused the old man to grow reminiscent. He placed his slippered feet up on the fen-der, and, while a brighter light came into his faded eyes, he talked of the "good old times."

"Once," he said, and he smiled at the recollection, "I did a very funny thing when I was a very small boy. I think I must have exhausted all my genius for fun in that one grand ef-fort, for I have never had the heart to attempt a funny thing since.

"It happened when I was about ten vears old I was then helping father to run the farm, and, I suspect, we ran it pretty hard, too, for the first thing I knew it got away from us; but that is another story. As I was saying, it happened when I lived on a farm. We had a hired man, a great, raw-boned overgrown Irishman, as full of mac pranks as Peck's bad boy. He was always playing some trick on me. One night he placed a large thistle in my bed. It was summertime, and I ha no underclothes on; and when I lay down on that thistle there was a sensation, several million of them. The Irishman stood and laughed at me un til great tears rolled down among the red stubble of his face. as well as a young fellow could swear that I would get even with him. spent all the next day studying out how it could be done, and by night I had a plan worked out which I thought o good I had to go out behind the barn where nobody could see me, and have a good laugh over it. Afterward was glad I had the laugh anyway. "That night I stayed up until all in the house had got to bed. Then I went and got mother's largest wash-tub, sat it at the foot of the stairs, and filled it with water. Next I se cured several lengths of stovepipe and scattered them at judicious distances upon the stairs. You see, the hired man slept upstairs. So did I, for that matter; but, then, he was always up an hour o more before I was, and so, of course, he would come downstairs first. In fact, I intended that he should come down head first, and then cool off in the tub

"Every part of the plan was carefully thought out. I was confident it would work like a charm. In fancy I could the look of astonishment that would jump all over the big frishman's face when his feet struck the stovepipes on the stairs and his head started for the tub of water. Then I would have the laugh on him, and I thought of the thistle pricks and the sweetness of re venge as I cautiously crept upstairs to bed. It was some time before I could get to sleep. I felt so good over the joke I was about to play on the Irish-man. In imagination I saw him go sprawling down the stairs, yelling like a wild Indian, and I fancied how funny he would look when he picked himself up out of the tub of water, blowing like a whale and swearing like himself "However, I at length fell asleep, and slept the sleep of a tired boy until suddenly I was awakened by some of wildly crying: 'Fire! fire!! fire!!!' some one "I always had a horror of being burned alive. The cry frightened me out of my wits. I did not stop to think; but sprang out of bed and rushed for the stairs. My feet struck a stovepipe and started off on their own hook. followed, trying to get ahead of them and succeeded just in time to land head first in the tub of water. "What a racket I and the stovepip made! How the water flew in every d rection! All in the house rushed to the stairway to see what the matter was The big Irishman stuck his head through the open door, and, seeing me standing shivering in the tub of water wearing a skinned nose and a wet shirt mildly inquired: 'Did ye iver git left me darlint?" "Mad? Mad is not the name for the state of my temper. 1 was raving, tear ing, boiling with maniacal fury " and the old man chuckled softly to himself at the picture memory held before his eyes of a youth now long, long dead. N. Y. Sun.

The above Reward will be paid for invmation that will lead to the arrest and Armation that will lead to the artist and conviction of the party or parties who placed iron and shabs on the track of the Emporium & Rich Valley R. R., near he east line of Franklin Housler's farm, in the evening of Nov. 21st, 1891.

HENRY AUCHU, 88-tf. Prendent

FINE LIQUOR STORE

EMPORIUM, PA.

THE undersigned has opened a first-class Liquor store, and invites the trade of Hotels, Restaurants, do. We shall carry none but the best Amer-ican and Imported

WHISKIES. BRANDIES

> GINS AND WINES.

BOTTLED ALE, CHAMPAGNE, Etc.

Bottled Goods.

I addition to my large line of liquors I carry, constantly in stock a full line of CIGARS AND TOBACCO.

ool and Billiard Room in same building. CALL AND SEE ME A. McDONALD, Α. PROPRIETOR, EMPORIUM, PA.

of water.

on to the ivy, as, if it came away, ther would be a fall, and all our fat would be in the fire. The ascent had to be made noiselessly, and as I looked at the high wall before us I began to think it was impossible. Running my eye on the lichen-gray face of the main building, however, I noticed something that looked like a series of huge monograms with a crescent above each, cut in high relief on the stones, beginning about ten feet from the ground.

"We might get up that way," I whispered.

Nicholas nodded, with a pale face. In his excitement he had forgotten the wild huntsman, much to my satisfaction. "Bend, then, and I will ascend from your back."

He leaned forward against the wall, and, climbing on his shoulders, 1 found that I might possibly raise myself by the monograms, which I discov ered to be the letters H. D. interlaced in one another, the initials of the second Henry and Diane de Poitiers; and the crescent was, as is well known, Madame Diane's crest. Taking a long breath, I lifted myself slowly—there was but an inch or so to hold on to-and at last found a crevice in which I could put the point of my boot. This was enough for me to change my hold to the next higher monogram, and finally came to a level with the parapet of the terrace. Here was a difficulty. Every tim I stretched my hand out to grasp the parapet I found that I could not reach over, and that my fingers slipped off from the slime and moss on the stones. Three times I made the attempt, and swung back three times, until I began to feel that the effort was beyond me There was, however, one chance, and. quietly thrusting my boot forward, I pale faces—would you not like to hear began to feel amidst the ivy for a pos- the news?"

Biron hesitated for a moment, and Biron nesitated for a moment, and then suddenly threw up his hand. "Very well-let it be as you wish. I promise, M. de Gomeron." "Enough, my lord-I thank you.

Chevalier Lafin has laid before you in detail all our resources. Let me now show you this." He unrolled a parchment that was before him, and handed t to the marshal. "Here," he added, "are the signatures of a ". that of Biron-now sign." It only needs

I could hear the beating of my heart n the silence that followed, and then Biron said, hoarsely: "No! No! I will ever put my name to paper." "Morbleu! marshal," burst out Lafin.

"This is no time for nibbling at a cher-ry. Tremouille and Epernon have signed. Put your seal to the scroll, and the day it reaches M. de Savoye, 30,000 troops are across the frontier, and you will change the cabbage gardens of Biron for the coronet of Burgundy and la Bresse.'

'And see your head on a crown piece marshal," added de Gomeron.

"But we have not heard, Lafin-" be gan the marshal.

"We will hear to-night, monseigneu -that horn meant news, and Zamet never fails. Curse the low-bred Italian! Pardieu! he is here," and as he spoke I heard what seemed to be three distinct knocks at a carved door, and, Lafin opening it, a man booted and spurred entered the room. He was splashed with mud, as one who had ridden fast and far.

"Zamet!" exclaimed the marshal and de Gomeron, both rising; and the face of the former was pale as death.

"Good evening, gentlemen! Maledet o! But I have had a devil of a ride.

"Well, friends, you all seem to have overhead. "Quick! quick! monsieur!" gasped Nicholas, and with a turn of his hand he freed Couronne and sprang to her back, the great mare standing steady is a rock

"Quick!" he called out again more loudly, and I made a vain effort to looser my beast, which, startled by the shots the baying of the dogs and our haste and hurry, plunged and kicked as though it were demented. "Damn you!" I hissed, half at the horse, half at the crop-eared idiot who had caused this disaster, and, manag ing somehow to scramble to the saddle cut the halter with a draw of my dag At this moment the dogs reached us, a dark object sprang up from the ground, and, fastening on the jaws of my horse, brought him to his knees, whilst the other beasts flew at my com Nicholas' pistol rang o panion. out to no purpose, the report was echoed by a chorus of shouts from the troopers following us, and Couronne, swinging around, lashed out with her heels at the hound that was baying her. ing forward with one arm half round the neck of my snorting horse, I thrust twice at the hound hanging to him, the first time sliding off his metal collar, but at the second blow my blade slipped to the hilt into something soft. it seemed of its own accord, and as the dead dog fell suddenly back, bearing my poniard with it, my freed horse ros to its feet, and, mad with pain, dashed forward. As we dashed into the wood the troopers attempted to follow, but it was with relaxed speed, and every moment we were distancing them, and neir cries, shouts and curses became Leaping fainter and more faint. fallen log Nicholas burst through a juniper bush, and my horse following him we came on to an open stretch which sloped down to the river.

travel; it is to him an inclination and felt want. On the other hand, the Frenchman when journeying, is restess, nervous, impatient, bored; the entire time he spends looking furtively at his watch, or consuming the railway time table. He is always crowded up with parcels, in addition his portmanteaux. He is, as a rule, encumbered with many useless articles. In fact, he dislikes travel which he finds an ennui and a fatigue.-La Petite Journal.

Inconsiderate.

Foster-So her father refused to consent to your marriage with his daughter?

Biglin-That's just the deuce of it He gave me no answer when I told him what I had called for, and told me if I didn't leave in less than two seconds he'd kick me out. What's to be done with a fellow who will wander off in that way from the subject of discus sion?"-Boston Transcript.

Novel Measuration.

"How far was it," asked the lawyer of the witness, "from your house to the coad where the difficulty occurred?" Bout a acre en a half, suh.

"I mean how many yards?" "Dey wuzn't any yards dere at all, suh, exceptin' of my yard, en dat wuz bout a acre en a half fum de road!" Atlanta Constitution.

Ready for a Rainy Day.

"What are you laughing at?" "Put an advertisement in the paper saying that the man who had appropriated my umbrella at the reception There were 27 umbrellas was known. at my house before I left this morning and I met a messenger boy on every block on the way down."-Detroit Free | Press.

NEAR P. & E. DEPOT

m

EMPORIUM

We keep none but the very best Beer and are prepared to fill Orders on short notice. Private families served faily if desired.

JOHN McDONALD.

A PAMPHLET

C.A.SNOW&CO OPP. PATENT OFFICE, WASHING

