DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEP-SIN CURES CONSTIPATION.

Mr. Bryan should be careful how he expands in his anti-expansion flights. President McKinley is a various and versatile politician. He was against the war before the war; and he may be against expansion if he shall find the path too costly or difficult to follow. Should Mr. Bryan by the ides of March find himself on the same side of the fence as the President he would not only have wasted his breath but he would be minus an issue. And would not that be saddening?—Philadelphia Record.

Philadelphia Press of Jan. 1, 1898:
The Ohio senatorial contest will very nearly monopolize the political interest which centers around the opening of the new year. Today will probably determine whether the opposition to Mr. Hanna is simply thundering in the index without much real substance. By every code of political honor, as well as by every consideration of party interest and public advantage, Mr. Hanna is entitled to the election. He was the sole nominee of the state convention for the place. He was the only candidate through the campaign. He can be defeated only by perjury, which must be condemned on every recognized principle of honorable political action. Looking at the matter on still higher grounds, Mr. Hanna ought to be elected because of his great part in shaping the course of the Republican party which resulted in the triumph of 1896, and because he is needed in its further councils. There is no ground upon which the warfare against him can be justified.

Philadelphia Press, Jan. 6, 1898:
The senatorial contest now proceeding in Ohio involves a good deal more than the election or defeat of Mark Hanna. It concerns the honor of men and of parties and the right of candidates to accept a trust under a distinct pledge, and then elected to prove unfaithful to it. These are more important than the success of any man in this instance or in any other contest. * * * There may be private grievances in Ohio, of which the public know nothing. But politics is no place for grievances. Party organization would be impossible if every man were to seek revenge for what he conceived to be his private wrongs. The place to have fought Mr. Hanna was in the state convention of last year, and before the Republican party had endorsed him for senator, or else through an open and many repudiation of the party declaration. That endorsement having been given and accepted, it should now be adhered to, and the Republican name saved from the claim of perfidy and dishonor.

Philadelphia Press, Jan. 9, 1898:
The clouds which have overhung the Ohio senatorial election seem to be breaking up, and there appears now to be a fair prospect of Senator Hanna's election. The actual recapture of two of the bolters who have come over to his column will have a moral weight greater even than mere number. It shows the effect of the awakened public sentiment, and will dispirit and discourage the opposition. Mr. Hanna has made his enemies. No man could perform the great work he has done during the last three years without making them. But his personality is only a secondary matter. He is the representative of its will and its unity. He was made its candidate and was accepted as such. The fight against him was not open and frank, but stealthy and insidious. It involved a violation of every code of personal and political honor, and this attempt to betray and defeat the party and to jeopardize every high public interest for mere personal revenge and malevolence has aroused a tempest of indignation before which the conspirators will find it hard to stand.

Philadelphia Press, Jan. 12, 1898:
Senator Hanna wins his fight. * * * The defeat of the shameless conspiracy which trampled on all political principle and disregarded all public honor is immeasurably more important than any individual fate. There is no measure of condemnation too severe for the treachery of this plot. * * * He was made the candidate of his party by a unanimous vote. There was no other aspirant. The conspirators were pledged to his support. If there is any code of political integrity or personal honor among men it bound all Republicans to accept a judgment thus pronounced and action thus sealed. * * * The election of Mr. Hanna retrieves what was a most deplorable and dangerous situation. His defeat, in view of all it involved, would have been a great misfortune. It would have jeopardized Republicanism in the senate when it needs to gain instead of being able to suffer losses. * * * And the Philadelphia Press is but one of a number of papers which allow their political news and opinions to be shaped by the Wanamaker advertisements as though he owned them outright.

LUXURY

It is to recline at ease on one of our superb couches. Slumber comes unsought under such delightful conditions. Pieces of furniture like these are as pleasant to look on as they are to lie on and this fact makes them an irresistible temptation to repose. Our entire stock is packed full of temptations for that matter, temptations in parlor and bedroom suits and in every kind of furniture, and unprecedented temptations in prices. Some people are always quoting from somebody, but our favorite quotations are figures like these: Couches, $5, $8, $9, and $10.
