

THE LITTLE MARTYR.

Let me kiss your tears away, Little one; Let me press you to my breast, Little one; Ah, the memory of to-day, Little one; Like a ghost will wreck my rest, Little one; I have punished you for naught; And I suffer, as I thought, Little one; I may win your smiles again, Little one; I may hear you shout at play, Little one; Still you give I may retain, Little one; But I've been unkind to-day, Little one; And alas! You'll not forget; Gifts and kindness and regret Shall not tear away the debt, Little one; May the Lord be good to you, Little one; May He lead you by the hand, Little one; May fair vistas meet your view, Little one; In a many pleasant land, Little one; And in all your trials here, May you never wring a tear From a blameless heart, my dear Little one; -S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Times-Herald.

THE STURGIS WAGER A DETECTIVE STORY.

By EDGAR MORETTE.

CHAPTER XII.—CONTINUED.

Continuation of Arbogast's letter: "That afternoon, as soon as the bank had closed, I called at the address Chatham had given me. He evidently expected me. With him was a man whom he introduced as James Withers, the depositor in whose favor my blunder had been made. Had I not been laboring under great excitement, it is likely that my suspicions would have been aroused by the strangeness of Withers' presence in Chatham's room. The two men received me pleasantly, and the alleged Withers, even before I could broach the subject, expressed his regret at hearing of the error which had been committed, and assured me of his willingness to reimburse the bank; but—ah! there was an ominous look in his eyes, and a certain money just then; everything he had was tied up in a promising enterprise which was bound to bring in a magnificent profit in the course of a few days if only he could raise a few paltry hundreds to enable him to hold out a little longer. If he failed to scrape together this small amount, all would be lost. Instinctively and relentlessly they drove me toward the trap they had prepared, and I was weak enough to fall into it. Before the interview was over, I had consented to allow Withers to still further overdraw his account, and I had received his solemn promise to refund, before the end of the week, the entire amount he owed the bank. Then Chatham suggested that it would be wiser to let the second overdraft come from another account. Withers agreed with him and stated that the check could be made in the name of Henry Seymour, a relative of his, who had recently opened a small account with the Knickerbocker bank. I strongly objected to sharing the secret of my infamy with any other; but I finally allowed myself to be overruled by the plausible scoundrels into whose clutches I had fallen. "The next day I took my first step in crime, by making such entries as would insure the honoring of Seymour's check. After that I was completely in the power of these two men. It was not long before I discovered that I had been their dupe. Chatham's accomplice was not the true Withers; for this man, a few days later, made a large deposit which more than covered his previous overdraft. The false Withers was Henry Seymour himself. "As soon as I had committed a felony, it became unnecessary for Seymour to keep up any further pretense of a desire to refund the money. I had helped him to steal, I was now in the meshes of crime as deeply as my accomplices; and, from that time to this they have forced me to act as their cat's-paw. During this period of two years the bank has been robbed in this way of over $250,000, ninety per cent of which has gone to Chatham and Seymour. "You can perhaps imagine what a hell my life has been during that time. With prison and disgrace staring me in the face; and with the absolute conviction that exposure must inevitably come sooner or later, I have suffered the torture of the damned. At the bank, I have been in a perpetual state of suspense. I have started at every word spoken to me; I have seen suspicion in every glance which has met mine; I have trembled and paled at every approach of one of the officers of the bank. And yet I have not dared to absent myself from my desk for an hour, lest an examination of my books during my absence should reveal my crime. I have been the first to reach the bank in the morning, and the last to leave it at night; I have not even taken the few minutes during the day which would have been required to enable me to obtain a hurried meal. On one pretext or another, during the last two years, I have kept no more than my annual vacation. I have dragged myself to my post when I was so ill that I could hardly stand, because I could not afford to have anyone take charge of my books for even an hour. And all that time, with a full realization of my degradation and infamy, I have been forced to continue my frauds, knowing that each one brought me nearer to the inevitable final exposure; but knowing equally well that a refusal on my part to continue my stealing would result in an instant betrayal by my accomplices. "At last further concealment became impossible. A week ago the yearly examination of the books took place. The expert accountant employed was, as usual, Thomas Chatham, and of course, as usual, his report was entirely satisfactory. It seemed, therefore, as though discovery could be postponed a little longer; when suddenly, this morning, we were informed that a change in the system of book-keeping would be adopted after the 1st of January. I saw at once that all was over. The discovery of my crime is now a matter of hours. I must be out of the way before the crash comes or I am doomed. I can already see the felon's stripes upon my back; the clang of the prison gates ring in my ears. "I am too dazed to think; but I feel that my only escape is in death. And yet I cling to life. I know that the happy days of the past are gone forever; and yet I feel a sort of numb relief at the thought that the worst is now certain to come, and to come at once. "I have carefully prepared my flight, so that I shall have plenty of time to reach a place of safety. Once there, I shall be free from pursuit; but I shall be an exile, and I shall carry with me to the grave the burden of my sin. "The most bitter pang in my remorse is caused by the thought of the great wrong I have done you, dear wife. You will now be forced to go to the world not only unprotected by the one whose duty and whose desire it was to smooth the way for you; but, what is worse, oppressed by the burden of my sin. "What little money I have left in the savings bank I have transferred to your name. You may use it all with a clear conscience for every dollar of it was honestly mine. I swear I have never had a single cent of the money I have stolen. It has all been drawn by Henry Seymour, and used I know not how. "As soon as I am settled in the place to which I am going I shall try, as far as lies in my power, to redeem my past by a life of honest labor; and I hope to be able to contribute to your support in the near future. "Oh! my wife! my darling wife! Would that the past could be blotted out, and that I could once more place my hand in yours, an honest man. Though you may find it hard to forgive me now, perhaps in time you may be able to think gently of him who through all his crime and degradation has remained "Your devoted husband, "JOHN W. ARBOGAST. "My safety depends upon your keeping the contents of this letter secret for at least three days. After that time, please send to Mr. Dunlap, president of the Knickerbocker bank, the inclosed papers, which will reveal to him the full extent of my delinquencies. "I do not hesitate to betray Chatham and Seymour; they did not scruple to ruin me. I have sent for Chatham, and I shall give him warning of my intended flight. If he sees fit, he can take such steps as he may choose to escape his own richly deserved punishment. "While Sturgis was reading Arbogast's letter, Dunlap, restlessly pacing the room, had observed him furtively. "Well?" he now inquired, stopping before the reporter, "what do you think of that?" "Poor woman!" exclaimed Sturgis, feelingly; "it is terrible to think of the suffering brought upon her by her husband's guilt. I ought to be hardened to a situation like this; for it is the inevitable sequel of almost every crime that is ever committed. But I am moved every time by the pathetic explanation of the innocent for the guilty." "Yes, yes; I know," said Dunlap, indifferently; "that it not what I meant. Did you note the amount which this scoundrel confesses he and his accomplices have stolen from the bank?" "Yes; it is a large sum." "Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! Why, man, if that is true, it is enough to cripple the bank—No, no; I don't mean that, of course; the bank is rich and could stand the loss of four times that amount. But a quarter of a million is a round sum, for all of that. It does not seem possible that, in spite of all our care, they can have succeeded in making away with so much money. But they did. There can be no doubt about that; for in the papers which Arbogast inclosed for me in his letter to his wife he explains just how the thing was done. It is simple enough when you know the trick; but it took fiendish cunning to devise it. I never would have thought that rascally bookkeeper intelligent enough to concoct such a scheme." "If the scheme is a work of genius," said Sturgis, "you may rest assured that 'X'—who may very well be Henry Seymour—was the author of it." "Well, at any rate," observed Dunlap, "there is one thing that must be done at once; and that is to find both Chatham and Seymour. It is not possible that in two years these men have spent a quarter of a million dollars between them." "It is at all events possible that they may not have done so," replied Sturgis; "for my investigations show that both Arbogast and Chatham have been men of regular and exemplary habits in their private lives. They do not appear to have been living much, if at all, beyond their means. There does not seem to have been, in the case of either man, any room for a double existence, which might otherwise have explained the situation. Neither was a spendthrift or a gambler, and neither was dissipated." "Then you have not the faintest idea of the present whereabouts of Chatham or of his mysterious accomplice?" "Let me tell you exactly what I have done up to the present time; and then you will be able to judge for yourself. And I, too, shall see more clearly where we stand; for the necessity of putting one's thoughts into words is an aid to clear thinking." CHAPTER XIII. THE LOST TRAIL. So saying, Sturgis settled himself in his chair and began his narrative. "After leaving you this morning, my first step was to gain admission to the Tombs—" "To the Tombs?" interrupted Dunlap. "Yes; the cabman has been remanded to the Tombs to await trial for complicity in the murder of the unknown man whose body was found in his cab." "Arbogast's?" "Yes, Arbogast's. But of course the police do not know that." "Were you allowed to see the cabman?" "Yes. As reporter of the Tempest, I was able to obtain an interview with him. When first arrested, the man, whose name, by the way, is Reilly, was incapable of making a connected statement; the lawyer assigned to defend him laughed in his face when he heard his story, and advised him to leave the romancing to a trained lawyer as his only chance of escaping the electric chair. Naturally, under the circumstances, the poor fellow hesitated to unbosom himself to a stranger. But I finally managed to gain his confidence by showing him that I believed his story, and that I was trying to find the men whose scapegoat he now is. It seems that yesterday afternoon, at about three o'clock, he was stationed at the cab-stand in front of Madison square, where he was accosted by a man, answering Chatham's description, who engaged him to drive him to the Fulton street ferry. On reaching the ferry, the man ordered Reilly to proceed to a low grogshop on South street. Here he entered, returning in a few minutes to invite the cabman to take a drink with him. The men seated themselves at a table upon which a bottle and two filled glasses were already placed. Chatham handed one of these glasses to Reilly, who drank it and probably many more. At any events, he remembers nothing further until he was rudely shaken by Chatham, who led him out into the street.

Here the cold air revived him, and he remembers noticing several things to which he did not pay much attention at the time, but which seem significant now as he recalls them: "Firstly—It was now quite dark. "Secondly—The cab, which had been facing south when he entered the barroom, was now facing north. "Thirdly—Chatham persistently carried his left hand in the bosom of his coat; he was very pale and seemed weak and ill. "He with difficulty climbed upon the box beside Reilly and ordered him to drive uptown. Presently the cabman became drowsy again. The next thing he remembers is coming to himself after the overturning of the cab by the cable car. That the man was drugged there can be no doubt. It is probable that while he sat apparently drunk in the barroom, Chatham took the cab to the Knickerbocker bank, expecting to smuggle Arbogast into it without Reilly's knowledge—a deep move, since it would effectually cover up the trail, if they wanted to make away with the bookkeeper, as they evidently did. Seymour may have met him at the bank by appointment; but I am more inclined to believe that he was there unknown to Chatham, and possibly for the purpose of spying upon the latter, to see if his instructions were carried out. He lent his accomplice a hand in the nick of time; and then, like a prudent general, he retired to a safe position, thence to direct further operations. What I cannot yet understand is, why Chatham should have taken the enormous risk he did in conveying Arbogast's body from the bank, since Seymour's intention was plainly to make away with the bookkeeper in any event. I can explain this only on the supposition that Seymour thought he could conceal the body in some way and prevent it from falling into the hands of the police. On the part of any ordinary criminal this would have been rank folly; but the resources of such a man as Seymour are such that I do not feel disposed to criticize his generalship in this particular without first understanding his ultimate object. From what I have seen of his work thus far, I have derived a profound admiration for the man's genius and cunning dexterity. Fortunately fate was against him this time. His instrument was the cable car which overturned the cab, thus delivering Arbogast's body into the hands of the police and furnishing the key without which, it is quite likely, Seymour might have remained forever undiscovered." "You think, then, you will succeed in unearthing this villain?" asked Dunlap, eagerly. "While there's life, there's hope," said Sturgis, with grim determination; "but I must confess that the outlook at present is not exactly brilliant. However, let me finish my report. During the excitement that followed the overturning of the cab, Chatham managed to escape, as you know, and he has thus far succeeded in avoiding arrest, although the police have kept a sharp lookout for him. Every steamship that sails, every train that leaves New York, is watched, but thus far without result. For my part, I am convinced that Chatham has not yet attempted to leave the city." "Isn't it probable, on the contrary, that he fled from New York immediately after running away from the overturned cab?" asked Dunlap. "I do not think so," replied Sturgis; "with his wounded hand he is a marked man; he would be easily recognized in a strange city. His safest hiding-place is here in New York, where he doubtless has friends ready to conceal him. Be that as it may, he remains for the present under cover and the scent is lost. The police are groping in the dark just now, and—'and so am I.'" The banker looked sorely disappointed. "And so that is all you have been able to discover? Not a trace of the money? It does not seem possible that a quarter of a million dollars can disappear so completely without leaving the slightest trace." "If we can ever find Seymour," replied Sturgis, "I make no doubt we shall be able to locate the lion's share of the money." "Yes," he added, thoughtfully; "that is all I have been able to discover up to the present time; or, at least, all that seems to be of any immediate importance. Of course, I called on both Mr. Murray and Mr. Scott; but, beyond the fact that Chatham, like Arbogast, was a model employe, all I got from them was the address of Chatham's boarding-house; there I was informed that the accountant had moved on New Year's eve without leaving his new address. There is one other link in the chain of evidence which I have investigated; but I cannot tell yet whether it will lead to anything or not. It may be immaterial; but who knows? Possibly it may prove to be the key to the entire problem." "And what is this promising link?" asked Dunlap, eagerly. "There is not much to tell on this score," answered Sturgis. "You will recall that according to the evidence which we have thus far collected, Chatham was attacked by Arbogast while he was in the act of using the telephone." "Yes; I remember how minutely you reconstructed that scene." "Well," continued the reporter, "I saw at once that the telephone might possibly prove to be an important witness for the prosecution. If I could only discover the name of the person with whom Chatham was talking when he was shot, I therefore called at the central office to make inquiries. As I was able to specify almost the exact minute at which this call was sent, it was an easy matter to find the young woman who had answered it; but the chances were that she would not remember the number called for. She did, however, for it had been fixed in her memory by some unusual circumstances. It seems that after giving Chatham the connection he wanted, the operator rang him up. While she was listening for a reply, she heard a sharp report, followed by a scream; then a sound of confused voices, and presently another sharp report. After that came complete silence, and she was unable to obtain any reply to her repeated calls. "You have here corroborative evidence of the scene between Chatham and Arbogast," said Dunlap. "Yes; but I did not need that. What I wished to know was the name of the person with whom Chatham wanted to converse." "Did you discover it?" "The number of the telephone he gave is that of the Manhattan Chemical company." "And what is the Manhattan Chemical company?" "That is the question I asked people connected with the commercial agencies. They replied that they knew very little concerning this firm; because, although it has been in existence for a couple of years, it apparently never asks anyone for credit, preferring to pay cash for all the goods delivered to it. I called at the office of the Manhattan Chemical company to investigate on my own account. The office and store occupy the basement of an old ramshackle building, whose upper stories are rented out as business offices. The laboratory and manufacturing department are downstairs in the cellar. The store contains only a few chairs and a long counter behind which rise shelves containing rows of bottles with brilliantly colored labels. A few painted signs upon the walls vaunt the merits of Dr. Henderson's Cough Cure and Dr. Henderson's Liver Specific. I did not expect to find anyone in on New Year's day. I was, therefore, surprised to see a solitary clerk sitting with his feet upon a desk and apparently absorbed in the reading of a newspaper—a pale young man of the washed-out blond type, with watery green-blue eyes and a scant mustache which fails to conceal a weak mouth. He rose to greet me with an air of surprise which does not speak well for the briskness of trade in the establishment. Indeed, if we are to judge by the aspect of things in the office of the Manhattan Chemical company, business in patent medicines does not appear to be flourishing just at present. By the way, did you ever hear of Dr. Henderson's remedies?" "No; I cannot say that I have," answered Dunlap. "That is the curious part of it," said Sturgis. "I have been unable to discover any advertisement published by this firm; and it is only by profuse advertising that such a concern can live." "Yes, of course," exclaimed Dunlap, somewhat impatiently; "but what has all this to do with Chatham?" "I don't know," replied Sturgis; "possibly nothing; perhaps a great deal." [To Be Continued.] CHINESE TREATY CITIES. Privileges That Are Accorded to the Foreigner in the Thirty-Eight Towns. Ever since the treaty of 1843 opened Canton, Amoy, Fuchow, Ningpo and Shanghai to foreign trade, we have called these and other towns since included with them treaty ports. The Germans, says the New York Sun, called them "Freihandelhafen," or free trade ports, but have now dropped that designation and use the words "Freihandelsplatze," or free trade places. The reason for the change is that for a long time all the towns opened to trade were on the coast or on the rivers reached by steamers from the sea. But to-day among the 38 treaty cities some are in the far interior like Mongtze, or Somen, and if situated on waterways, can be reached only by the smallest junks. It is no longer accurate to designate all the treaty cities in China as ports. Under the many treaties made with China a foreigner equipped with passports is free to travel anywhere and missionaries may live in any town. The treaty cities, however, give foreigners special privileges. In these towns alone the alien may establish his home, buy and sell property, follow any calling or trade and travel in the suburbs without a passport; under the terms of the treaty of peace between China and Japan he may erect factories and engage in industrial production. The 38 treaty cities are, in fact, so many centers of growing foreign influence. Scattered through the 15 provinces they are the most potent agencies to-day for the dissemination of western ideas. Railroads are not more needed in China than the addition to the number of treaty cities throughout the empire. Didn't Want Congratulations. The late duke of Westminster once received when at Stack, in West Sutherland, a telegram from a friend, expressing a hope that the duke's horse would win a certain big race. The duke had 30s to pay for the carriage of the telegram from the nearest office. He instantly wrote his thanks for the attention, adding, however, that his friend need not trouble to wire again if the horse won. The friend at once telegraphed in reply: "All right," which cost the duke 20s more. The horse did win the race, and his grace netted £10,000; but it is doubtful if he ever forgave his friend the little joke which had cost him £2. The Only Safe Way. Mr. Sappy—I hope I'll not get a fool for a wife. She—You better remain single, Mr Sappy.—Harlem Life.

HE EXPLAINED IT.

The Man Who Doesn't Know Anything About Golf Defines a Term of the Game.

"What do they mean by 'two up' in golf?" she asked as she put down the paper she had been reading, says the Chicago Times. "Fuh!" he exclaimed, in a startled way, for he knew about as much about golf as he did about throwing the boomerang. Still, no man is going to show his ignorance of sports to his wife. "What do they mean by 'two up'?" she repeated. "Two up," he returned, "Oh, yes, of course. Well, you've heard of 'topping' a ball, haven't you?" "Certainly." "Well, when you 'top' a ball, naturally it's up." "I don't quite see—" "Don't see!" he interrupted. "The top is always up, isn't it? You never saw the top at the bottom, did you?" "No-o-o." "Well, there you are. It's plain as day. When you 'top' a ball it's 'one up,' and when you 'top' two balls, it's 'two up.' Now, don't bother me any more." "But what is 'topping' a ball?" she persisted. "Good heavens! how ignorant you are!" he exclaimed. "Why 'topping' a ball is knocking it so high that it never comes down. I should think the expression 'one up' would make that clear to you." Fee for Bank Directing. A stranger got off the car, and, accosting a newsboy, asked him to direct him to the nearest bank. "This way," said the "newsie," and turning the corner, pointed to a skyscraper just across the street. "Thank you, and what do I owe you?" said the gentleman, pulling a penny out of his pocket. "A quarter, please." "A quarter! Isn't that pretty high for directing a man to the bank?" "You'll find, sir," said the youngster, "that bank directors are paid high in Chicago."—Chicago Tribune. Wouldn't This Jolt You. Mr. Wabash (at the ball)—Is your programme full, Miss Olive? Miss Olive (of St. Louis)—My goodness, no! I've been waiting more than an hour for some one to come along and take me down to supper.—Chicago Evening News. Lane's Family Medicine. Moves the bowels each day. In order to be healthy this is necessary. Acts gently on the liver and kidneys. Cures sick head ache. Price 25 and 50c. Arithmetic Class. Teacher (pointing at problem)—Now, James, what comes after the dollar? James—Pa says it's the collectors, ma'am.—Syracuse Herald. Piso's Cure cannot be too highly spoken of as a cough cure.—J. W. O'Brien, 322 Third Ave., N., Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 6, 1900. "This month I celebrate my twenty-fourth birthday." "That's odd—so do I." "But I celebrate mine for the first time."—Heitere Welt. The wise man, under the impulse of remorse, kicketh himself; but the fool soaketh himself.—Puck. You can convict nearly anyone of being a fool.—Aitchison Globe.

PERUNA Many a woman, sick and weary of life, dragged down by weakening drains, painful irregularities, depression, and the hundred and one ailments which affect women only, has found in Pe-ru-na a bright star of hope, which has changed her misery to joy, her suffering to health. No woman need suffer from the derangements peculiar to her sex, if she will give Pe-ru-na a fair trial. The majority of weaknesses which make woman's life a burden, spring from a simple cause. The mucous membrane which lines the pelvic organs becomes weakened and inflamed owing to strain, cold, catarrh, etc. This causes catarrhal congestion, inflammation, painful irregularities, depression of spirits, irritability, weakness and suffering. It shows in the haggard lines of the face, the dull eyes, the sallow complexion and angular form. For the prompt cure of such ailments try Pe-ru-na. It drives away "the blues," clears the complexion, brightens the eyes, changes thinness to plumpness, and cures pains, aches and drains, because it immediately strikes at the root of such troubles and removes the cause. For a free copy of "Health and Beauty" Address Dr. Hartman, President of the Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio. RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 26 S. California Ave., Chicago.

900 DROPS CASTORIA For Infants and Children. The Kind You Have Always Bought Bears the Signature of Dr. J. C. Fitcher of Use For Over Thirty Years CASTORIA THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY. Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of INFANTS & CHILDREN. Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral. NOT NARCOTIC. Recipe of Old Dr. SAMUEL FITCHER: Pumpkin Seed, A. Senna, Rockella Sella, Aloe Seed, Pimento, Bit Carbo-nac-Soda, Hops Seed, Coriand Sugar, Watergreen Flavor. A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP. Fac Simile Signature of Dr. J. C. Fitcher, NEW YORK. EXACT COPY OF WRAPPER.

WALTHAM WATCHES The Waltham Watch Company was the first company in America to make watches; the first to be organized (half a century ago), and is the first at the present time in the quality and volume of its product. "The Perfected American Watch", an illustrated book of interesting information about watches, will be sent free upon request. American Waltham Watch Company, Waltham, Mass.