Dissipation in Reading.

 As there may be intemperance ineverything, there may be dissipation in so good a thing as reading.
A ealthful reading is one of the most beneficial of all mental exercises, though it is not as some mistakingly inagine, the best. But when reading is done without intellectua stimulation, merely to kill time, it becomes a low form of dissipation, for it dissipates the mentality. Again, when it is done merely to excite the imagination, to overstimulate the mind, it is equally dissipating and dangerously un now so near at hand, is the time when dissipation in reading is most common though it is not the only time when it is practiced. Some persons dissipate in reading all the year around, with the result that they become unable to think clearly and logically on any subject This dissipation may consist in reading nothing but trash, and again it may consist in reading what is classed reading it to excess. For example, form of dissipation by reading con stantly poetry of the stantly poetry of the highly colored sensuous sort. Reading of this sensuous sort. Reading of this kind needs to be balanced by a pernsal of the poets, such as Wordsworth and Tennyson. A steady diet of Swine burne or Kipling would not be healthful, though the verse itsel Again, it would be dissipation to read constantly the novels of the present romantic school. These should be offset by the worksof th students of character. But habit ual novel reading, no matter how good the books read, is bad. Ev ery one should from time to time take up some work of thought o fact. Perhaps the best antidot for the novel is history and ther quest of Peru,", which are as fasciBut, after all, it is aimless thoughtless reading of any kind thoughtless reading of any kind that constitutes the worst dissipation of this kind. To read simply to kill time is a vicious pastime dealls the intellectual forces weakens the will, and blunts the appreciation. It brings on a form to the moral perceptions. The val1 employment, like tha must be a consciousnoss.
