Interesting Letter. An interesting letter from Mr. J. S. Douglas, who recently visited California, will appear in our next issue.

Hundreds Killed in Fierce Flood. ROANOKE, Va., June 23—Between 500 and 600 lives have been lost and millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed by a frightful flood and cloudburst that swept over the Elkhorn and Pocahontas coal regions, in the extreme southwestern section, near the Virginia line, about one hundred and twenty miles from this city, last night and to-day. The hundreds of ravines and streams only served to swell the Elkhorn river until it resembled a huge rolling torrent, carrying destruction in its wake. Railroad lines and tracks, whole buildings, trees, telegraph poles, huge boulders and every imaginable movable thing that came in its way went down the mountain torrent in seething, roaring masses. Many dead bodies could be seen floating by those who sought the safety of the mountain side. The trainmaster of the Norfolk and Western Railroad walked the track between Vivian and North Fork, a distance of twelve miles. He discovered thirty bodies floating in the river. Saturday night is pay night in the coal fields, and it is supposed that the coal miners had flocked to the towns in the district to do their trading, and there is no telling how many of them were caught in the flood and drowned. At Keystone, W. Va., the greatest damage was done and from meagre reports received at 11 o'clock to-night it seems to rival the Johnstown flood. It is known, however, that every building in that town of 2,000 inhabitants was swept away save one saloon that stands on a hillside above the town proper. For twenty-five miles the great coal regions are in ruins. More than thirty miles of Norfolk and Western Railroad track is said to be completely destroyed. The railroad yards at Vivian, W. Va., were completely destroyed and most of the town washed away. North Fork Junction and a few other towns suffered in a like manner. Between 12 and 3 o'clock this morning it seemed as if the heavens opened their flood gates about the town of Vivian. A passenger train was caught in the flood and the lives of the passengers were saved by the use of ropes thrown over from the coke ovens which lined the Vivian yards. The passengers caught the ropes and willing hands dragged them from the flooded trains and over the oven barricades. Owing to the fact that the telegraph lines were all down the Norfolk and Western detailed couriers by foot to cover the territory, they returning in a short time with their reports. One man in a short walk down the devastated district reported having seen thirty-eight dead bodies. Many bodies will likely never be accounted for. The telegraph office, the railroad offices and officials and the passing trains are visited by hundreds of eager people, all awaiting some message as to the fate of their friends and relatives. The railway officials are reticent, but admit that at least 200 lives have been lost, Keystone destroyed and millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed. The flood has not only damaged the Elkhorn Valley, but every one of the thirty-three flat-top coal operations has suffered more or less. Great damage has resulted in the Clinch Valley section, which extends south from Graham, Va.
