Helen Keller's First Earnings.

There is a pretty story in connection with the series of articles which Helen Keller, the wonderful blind girl, has written for The Ladies' Home Journal, telling about her own life from infancy to the present day. She always has shrunk from the publicity which follows successful literary work, and it was with great difficulty that she was persuaded to take up the task of preparing her autobiography. She had, however, set her heart on owning an island in Halifax harbor for a summer home, and in a spirit of fun the editor of The Journal offered to buy it for her, or to provide the means to buy it. When the work of writing appeared especially irksome Miss Keller was reminded of her desire to become a landholder, and it spurred her on. Just before Christmas she completed the first chapter of her marvelous story; and on Christmas morning she received from her publishers heck for a good round sum. Her delight may be imagined, for this was the first money of any account which she had ever earn-"It is a fairy tale come true," she said. Whether she will really carry out her plan to buy the island remains to be seen.

Sinnamahoning Letter.

The Liars Club held a special meeting last Saturday evening, to consider A. W. Mason's snake story. The opinion of all members was that Mason must have visited Mike Murphy. Snakes in February with zero weather caused every member to faint dead away until O. L. Bailey appeared with small-pox preventative. Hanscom says the story is "impossible" and should Mason's application come before the club his admission would be impossible. No such a preposterous story will go with us. Beckwith worked for the company at Sandy Ridge. When he came home Saturday evening and learned that his wife had gone away, he sent word to her that she should return. The woman did not return at the time stated, and Beckwith arming himself with a revolver, started over the mountain, seven and a half miles away, for Sandy Ridge. The Philadelphia Times says: In the remarkable increase of population in smaller centres there is great significance. Pennsylvania has many of these. Some of the small cities contribute wonderfully to the industrial wealth. They have enterprising populations, beautiful homes and delightful social conditions. In these places there is a very high average of intelligence and public spirit and the people are widely interested in the event of the world. They supply many of the rising people of the day. They make good movements effective. They have that direct interest which in large cities is often so scattered that it becomes lost. Thus their increase in population, in industry, in wealth and in social attraction becomes a matter of the very highest value to the nation.

Some Facts About Natural Gas.

In speaking of the impossibility of pumping air into the gas mains for the purpose of making the meters work, he American Manufacturer says:

purpose of making the meters work, the American Manufacturer says:

"It has become such a common cry among consumers of natural gas that the company is pumping air into their mains, when the gas pressure is low that some attention should be given the subject. And the most peculiar feature of this charge is the men of ordinary common sense and many with a redimentary education in chemistry make these charges. If firms supplying natural gas were to pump air into their mains they would within 24 hours asphyxiate or blow up seven-eights of their consumers and the subsequent damage suits would ruin such a concern beyond all hopes of recovery.

The simplest illustration to show that air cannot be forced through a gas main and make light, even for an instant, is that of a new instalation in a building. After the plumber or pipe fitter completes his work and the gas pressure is permitted to enter the pipes any attempt at lighting a burner will be frustrated. A pressure of air will be forced from the pipe sometimes strong enough to blow out a lighted match but it will not burn. This is because the pipes are filled with air, nitrogen, oxygen carbon dioxide and a certain amount of vapor. This will not burn, although it is necessary to aid combustion of gas and other inflamable substance. What results in a new pipe or where air fills a pipe would also result if a pressure of air was forced into a gas main to force the gas more quickly through the mains or to enrich the gas or even make a gas meter work more rapidly, as the charge is frequently made.

It has been maintained that the air pressure forced into the gas main as-made.

It has been maintained that the air pressure forced into the gas main as-similates with the gas and impoverishes it. If this is true, why did not the air in the gas pipe left there after a plumb-
