FANCY PILLOWS.

A pretty pillow may be made of satin jeans, embroidered or appliqued in the college initials, the college yell, or the individual's fraternity emblem.

matching those on the corners of the pillow, are fastened to the peaks of the Brownie caps.

VASSAR PILLOW.

A Michigan pillow of turquoise blue jeans bore the athletic pennant applied in deep blue satin, with the M embroidered across it in gold. The same design is effective in a Harvard cushion, if shades of crimson are substituted for the blues. A Yale pillow of deep blue linen was outlined in a fish-net design with heavy white cord, over which applique white linen hearts were scattered, or rather entangled, in a most suggestive way.

A Cornell pillow, made square, in heavy carmelian red jeans, bore a still more coquetish decoration. An oval piece of thick, white linen, nine inches long, was stitched flat on the diagonal of the pillow, and edged with an embroidered scroll in black and gold silk, strongly suggestive of an old-fashioned miniature frame. On the back ground formed by the white linen was stitched a delicate silhouette in black taffeta, so carefully cut and stitched as to preserve the likeness of the giver as accurately as the sketched silhouette from which it was copied. To keep the silk in place, it was drawn over a strip of black cardboard, cut,

"the big, big V," which is daintily applique in ruched rose-colored ribbon.

Equally attractive is the round "Smith" pillow of white silk, mull, or bolting-cloth, filled with downy milkweed silk, and sprayed with embroidered white violets. Best of all for the weary scholastic head is the big, cool pillow of dull green silk, stuffed with spicy pine needles and embroidered, either with the pine tree design or sprayed with the needles embroidered in shades of brown silk.

For Princeton, a heavy orange jeans pillow was especially effective, with a rampant tiger sprawling in outline across it, in deeper shades of orange and black. The Princeton yell sissed and boomed from the reverse side, in slim irregular black letters, and the cushion was edged in twisted black and orange cord.

of course, in the exact shape of the silhouette. A broad twist of carmelian satin ribbon, ending in a large bow at the upper corner, finished the edge.

A Chicago pillow, which serves its owner as a missile as well as a bit of decoration, is of maroon jeans, cut and stuffed to the exact shape though twice the size, of the standard foot ball. The lacings are gilt cord, and the last three words of the Chicago yell glitter aggressively in gold thread across one of the sections. For a Pennsylvania boy, the same design is developed in alternating sections of deep crimson and blue, laced together with ribbons of the same shade.

A Brown University cushion is of chocolate saten, with three familiar countenances, outlined in brown and gold thread, beaming over a fence, which is also outlined in bright green couching cord. The effect is irresistibly funny if gilt and jet spangles are used for the eyes and tiny tassels,
