Satirical Banking Rules. The following rules are recommended to the attention of those who do business at banks. By not following them, they will be the means of saving a great deal of time and annoyance. If you have any business with a bank, put it off until 3:30 o'clock, or, if possible, a little later, as it looks more business-like to rush in just as the bank is closing. In depositing money try to get it upside down and wrong end foremost in order that the teller may have a little exercise in straightening it out before counting. It is best not to take your bank-book with you but call another time to have the entry made. You can thus make two trips to the banks where one would suffice. If a check is made payable to your order, be careful not to endorse it before handing it to the teller but let him return it to you and wait while you endorse it. This helps to pass the time and is a pleasure and relief to the teller. Never keep any record when your note falls due then; censure the bank officials when the note is protested. Always gate your checks ahead, it is a never failing sign that you keep a good balance in bank, or if you do not wish it generally known that you are doing a good business, do not deposit money until your check will be in. When you make a deposit, do not use a deposit slip but mix bills and checks indiscriminately together since it facilitates matters hugely. A strict observance of the foregoing rules will make your accounts desirable for any bank and will make you a general favorite with all the bank officers. A Japanese Superstition. Writing exhaustively of dragon flies Lafcadio Hearn says in his book, "A Japanese Miscellany," of "the dragon fly of the dead." "Unlike the equally weird name 'yurei-tombo, or 'ghost dragon fly,' the term shiro-tombo does not refer to the appearance of the insect, but to the strange belief that certain dragon flies are ridden by the dead, used as winged steeds. "From the morning of the thirteenth to the midnight of the fifteenth day of the old seventh month—the time of the festival of the Bon—the dragon flies are said to carry the hotoke-sama, the august spirits of the ancestors, who then revisit their former homes. Therefore, during the Buddhist All Souls' children are forbidden to molest any dragon flies, especially dragon flies that may happen to enter the family dwelling. "This supposed relation of dragon flies to the supernatural world helps to explain an old folk saying, still current in some provinces, to the effect that the child who catches dragon flies will never obtain knowledge." How Frederick Stopped Duelling. When Frederick the Great ascended the Prussian throne, fatal duels among officers were of daily occurrence. He resolved to put an end to the practice, and he did—for a time; as long as he reigned, in fact. He issued an edict that any officer fighting a duel and surviving would be shot or hanged. Two officers appealed to him to be allowed to try to slay each other. Granted on two conditions, that he (the king) should choose the ground and be present at the encounter. Accepted. Frederick chose the ground, attended the "meet" and took his seat behind the fine new gibbet he had erected in honor of the occasion. The combatants approached his majesty, saw the gibbet, became puzzled and embarrassed. "What may this mean, your gracious majesty?" they ventured to ask. "It means this," was the snave reply—"that the man who survives will be hanged as high as Haman on that gibbet." "There was no duel.—Pall Mall Gazette. People Who Did Not Kill. The inhabitants of the Canary Islands, the Guanches, were, it is supposed, but the mountain shepherds of a submerged world. Though so strong physically, the Guanches were nevertheless a very gentle race. They rarely made war on one another, and when the Europeans fell into their hands they did not kill them, but sent them to tend sheep in the mountains. So tame were the birds in this happy land that when the Spaniards first landed they came and fed out of their hands. To kill an animal degraded a man. The butcher was a reprobate criminal and outcast and lived apart, he and his assistants being supported by the state. No woman was allowed to approach the shambles, and in such horror was killing held by these giants that no man could be ennobled until he had publicly declared that he had not been guilty of killing any animal, not even a goat. Their standard of morality was high. Robbery was almost unknown among them. Maternal Love of the Whale. No other member of the animal kingdom displays more maternal affection than the whale, especially if its calf is harpooned. The harpooner never throws his harpoon into the little one with the intention of killing it, for if this is done the mother will instantly forsake it. If alive and struggling, however, the dam can be easily enticed toward the boat to meet its fate. Knowing this, the whale fishermen always strike a calf if possible and thus often make captures that could not be effected under other circumstances. As soon as the dam becomes aware of the snaring of her young she rushes toward it, encourages it to swim away and even assists it by taking it under her fin. She seems to lose all regard for her own safety and boldly attacks the boat containing the whalers or circles about it totally regardless of the harpoons that are hurled at her and enter her flesh.
