Search for Tribe of Chinese Jews.

A letter from Shanghai, China, to the Philadelphia North American contains the following remarkable information relative to a hidden band of Chinese Jews. The letter says: "Deep in the heart of an interior Chinese province is hidden a band of Chinese Jews. Now that peace has been restored throughout the Flowery Kingdom, the Jewish colony of this city intends opening communications with its Mongolian co-religionists in order to establish close relations. It has been known for some time that such a tribe existed. Occasionally travelers have brought from Kaifeng Fu the news of a strange sect that did not follow the religious teaching of Buddha, Mohamet or Confucius, but worshipped according to the laws of Moses. An attempt was made to reach them some fifty years ago, but it was thwarted by the Tai Ping rebellion. Again within the last three years the Boxer insurrection brought failure to a similar effort. Altogether there are said to be seven clans in the colony, with a male membership of probably 140. How they came to China, and from which of the original tribes they descend is a problem which Hebrew scholars will have to decide. Their present condition is deplorable and their religious observances have degenerated, but this is not surprising in view of their complete isolation from worshippers of their own faith. They have no tribal leader, no synagogue and no schools in which to educate their children, but they have staunchly resisted the influence of Buddhist and Mohammedan neighbors, and venerate above all things a well stone on which is engraved the names of Moses, Abraham and Adam. They have a few traditional commands that they remember and observe. They never use heathen musical instruments in marriage ceremonies. They take out snies before preparing the meat for their food and are prohibited to eat pork. They did not know until recently of the existence in any part of the world of any Jews besides themselves. Their first knowledge of their outside co-religionists was when they received the message which local Jews sent to them.

A Seasonable Short Story.

The most seasonable of many excellent short stories in the July McClure's (among which is an Emily Lou story and a Newfoundland story by Norman Duncan), is Mary Stewart Cutting's, "In the Married Quarters." No more feeling picture has ever been drawn of the reverse side of the summer vacation—the side of the husband who remains behind—not in the city where there are roof-gardens and restaurants and electric fans, but in a mosquito infested suburb, where one is left alone to battle with the moths and the red ants; for in this case both cook and second girl seem also to have fled. The remarkable part of it is that the story should have been written by a woman, and the whole in a spirit of sympathy, not of satire. The sketch is another of Mrs. Cutting's "Little Stories of Married Life," which are coming to be among the most welcome of the various noteworthy fiction series running in McClure's.

No False Claims.

The proprietors of Foley's Honey and Tar do not advertise this as a sure cure for consumption. They do not claim it will cure this dread complaint in advanced cases, but do positively assert that it will cure in the earlier stages and never fails to give comfort and relief in the worst cases. Foley's Honey and Tar is without doubt the greatest throat and lung remedy. Refuse substitutes. L. Taggart.

Sweden and The Swedes

Sweden is one of the largest countries in Europe and more densely populated than America. There are seven million Swedes scattered in different parts of the world; of these five million still remain in Sweden.

The number of marriages is diminished in late years, not because of economic conditions but because of larger demands socially. A child in Sweden may look forward to a life of 50 years, while in England, where health conditions are next best, a generation attains the age of 46 years.

Sweden is now the oldest remaining kingdom of the civilized countries of Europe. It has never been subjected to foreign tyranny. Casual tyrants it has had for short periods only.

National property and treasury deposits are so large, that if an increase continues as in the past, Sweden will soon be a rich country. Its constitution is the only one in Europe, with the possible exception of England's, that has had its birth and development in independence and has not been produced because of pressure from foreign innovations.

There is not ahead of any nation so beloved by its people as Oscar II. Others live and move surrounded by police guard, but King Oscar goes unattended in and out among his people, in the streets and market-places or out into the fields and woods, without the slightest fear of getting hurt by any one of his subjects.

The parliament, or riksdag, consists of two legislative bodies. To one of these only rich persons, with an annual income of at least 4,000 kronor or eligible. They pay their own expenses and receive no pay. The members of the other division get their traveling expenses paid and receive pay of 10 kronor per day. These two bodies make and modify all laws, which afterwards are submitted to the king for signature.

Laws are made slowly, but they tend to protect the interests of the common people. In judicial matters, a person, however poor, has recourse to the courts, the last being that of the king himself.

Crime and lawlessness is diminished more and more every year. The jails are kept in good condition, but are so little used that, perhaps, in the future, they may be used for educational purposes.

The religious conditions are very favorable. The transition from paganism to Christianity and later Catholicism to Protestantism was voluntary and conclusive. Consequently Christianity has taken deep root among the people. Work along temperance lines is also progressing. In respect to her public school system, Sweden is ahead of the rest of Europe; the quality of teaching is also universally acknowledged to be foremost. Our sloyd is known and taught to people of many nations. (The doctor mentioned a long list of Swedish philosophers, scientists and astronomers.)

Chemistry knows of seventy-five elements; of these, twenty were discovered by Swedes.

The thermometer that is used in all countries except England and America, where Fahrenheit is used, and which rationally puts the freezing point at zero and the boiling point at 100 degrees, was made by and named after the Swede, Carl Celsius. Fahrenheit put the freezing point at 32 degrees and the boiling point at 212 degrees, but where he got the 32 I don't understand.

Sweden harvests annually 434 kilograms of grain per inhabitant, Western Europe 276, and America 404. Potatoes yield annually in Sweden 286 kilo, in America 78 and in Western Europe 307. For one thousand inhabitants there are in Sweden 350 milch, cows in Western Europe 150, in America 210. Of beef cattle for the same population there are in Sweden 100, in Western Europe 150, in America 370.

The mining resources in Sweden are exceptionally large. In one place one million tons of ore per year may be mined for 600 years before level ground is reached and shafts need be built. The discovery of dynamite by a Swede has made mining easy. An abundance of nature water power helps the development of all industries. Sweden has more lines of railroad in proportion to her population than any other country. Its extensive telephone system is world-renowned. Every tenth home has its own telephone. In his own church in Gefle he has a telephone which is connected with the central station when he preaches his sermon on Sundays, and many people in the city and vicinity may sit down and listen to his sermon in the quiet of their own homes.—Extract from P. Waldstrom's Lecture, delivered in Boston, Oct. 11th, 1901.
