HOW TO SHIP LAMBS.

It Pays Well to Prepare the Carcasses a Stretcher.

Winter lambs for market should weigh not less than 45 pounds alive, and be fat. This condition is determined somewhat accurately by feeling the brisket and the tail near the body. A high degree of fatness is more important than weight, as they sell by the carcass, rather than by weight. The weight of two lambs being the same, the younger one will sell higher. The evidences of age are the fleece and the degree of ossification in the bones. Most lambs are marketed between the ages of ten and 16 weeks, a few as young as eight weeks. The market for them extends from Christmas to Easter, according to the Ohio Farmer correspondent, who further says:

To prepare a dressed lamb for ship-ment sew about each lamb a square yard of clean, new muslin, as shown in the cut. We have shipped in various ways, and by both express and re-frigerator freight. We now place each lamb on a stretcher, as shown in the second figure, and then wrap in burlap, which we get of the furniture dealers. We tried shipping in crates, but the crates would get crushed.

The diagram is a slight modification in form from the stretcher shown with a lamb on it. The side pieces should be about two inches wide and a half-inch thick, and made of light, strong tim-ber, such as poplar, basswood or elm. The ten-inch cross-piece should be one and a half inch square; A is a ten-penny nail driven through this piece diagonally, pointing toward the short projecting ends of the side pieces. This is to hold the lamb's neck in position, as it is forced down upon it. Press the front legs down upon the neck and hold there with a twine around the stretcher. Loop short pieces of twine about the hind legs above the hocks and draw tightly, fastening at B. The legs should be cut off below the knee and hock.

LARGE HIVES NEEDED.

When the Bees Have Plenty of Space Swarming Is Usually Reduced to a Minimum.

The swarming, says C. P. Dadant, is very much like emigrating among the human race, caused by a feeling of dis-comfort, the population of the hive becoming too great for the space at their disposal. Hence, small hives cause more swarming than large ones. For that reason, and many others, we have always favored a very large hive, one capable of accommodating the queen in her brood-rearing and the worker bees in their honey harvest.

Our hive, which is nearly one-half larger than an ordinary eight-frame Langstroth hive, is arranged for halfstory supers, of which, one, two or more may be used at one time. We put these supers on the hive with frames full of comb saved by extracting the honey the previous season, and keep adding room in the shape of empty combs from time to time during the

When the harvest is over, we extract the honey and return all these combs to the bees to be cleaned up for another season. During the winter these combs are put away to be used the following year. Thus we have used combs for 25 years, one season after another, for producing extracted honey, and an almost total prevention of swarming has been the result.

But plenty of space is not the only desideratum for the prevention of natural swarming. We must have conveniences to make the bees comfortable.-Midland Farmer.

Kill Hen-Killing Dogs.

We lost a good many hens a few sum-mers ago from dogs. Occasionally a young dog will develop a mania for killing hens, as they do for killing sheep. Such dogs are apt to train in pairs. They will catch a hen, bite it through the back, crushing the ribs, and then chase down another. We found two strange dogs at work one day in this manner, but not until they had killed over 20. After a few days they reappeared and killed about the same number before the hired man appeared on the scene with a gun. One of the dogs fell a victim to his sure aim, but the other made his escape A suit at law resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff and established the fact that the owner of a dog is liable for damages in a case of this kind.—Rural New Yorker.

The cost of producing poultry meat on the farm is less than for the production of pork and beef, and yet it sells for as much and is better eating. Don't neglect the farm flocks.

Treat Catarrh in Spring.

The spring is the time to treat catarrh. Cold, wet winter weather often retards a cure of catarrh. If a course of Peruna is taken during the early spring months the cure will be prompt and permanent. There can be no failures if Peruna is taken intelligently during the favorable weather of spring.

As a systemic catarrh remedy Peruna eradicates catarrh from the system wherever it may be located. It cures catarrh of the stomach or bowels with the same certainty as catarrh of the
