Justice to the Historical Novel.

Publishers, casting up their accounts, find that last year's business was large and profitable. Many books were printed and sold. It is asserted that there were few failures among all the works produced-failures, that is, from a financial standpoint. The publishers do not venture the assertion that all the books were successful as literary productions. They content themselves with the declaration that the average of merit was respectable and we may accept the statement as just. It is probable, thinks the Chicago Chronicle, that the literary output never before presented such a dead level of respectable mediocrity as characterizes it to-day. There are few absolutely worthless books; there are no great books. Looking back over the literary output of 1903 only two books recall themselves to memory as distinguished above the rest by reason of their subject matter or their style. Senator Hoar's "Reminiscences of Seventy Years" is one of the two; Morley's "Life of Gladstone" is the other. Neither is a "popular" book and neither is likely to achieve a circalation equal to that enjoyed by many pieces of contemporary fiction. It is contemporary fiction, however, which brings the contemporary literary standard up to a fairly good average. It is said that everybody is writing historical novels, and though the statement is; of course, an exaggeration, it is true enough to furnish an explanation for the relatively good quality of the grist of fiction. In the historical novel, that is to say, the writer finds the main incidents of his story ready made for him His background is, so to speak, sketched In and he has only to supply the details. His imagination is not heavily drawn upon and if he possesses a respectable knowledge of the mechanics of literature-if he knows how to put words together grammatically and with some appearance of skill-his novel is likely to be mildly entertaining. It can hardly be absolutely stupid, for the events of history are not stupid. Consequently, the historical novel, so far from being the legitimate object of persiflage, deserves our commendation. So long as novelists stick to history we shall have no recurrence of the odoriferous and imbecile trash which passed current as fiction a few years ago.

The red necktie has loomed up into prominence again. This time it is the New Orleans Times-Democrat that raises its voice in protest. The right to wear red clothes, declares that paper, is not an inherent right so far as the male portion of the population is concerned, and no one has objected to the female portion arraying themselves in such colors as may be considered to suit their complexions. But no man has any vested right in a complexion, or if he has it should be taken away from him at once as a thing annoying if not dangerous to the public peace The face that requires a red necktie to enhance its beauty should be at once suppressed and the owner should be required to get another face or remain in seclusion. The red necktie is contra bonos mores and is an affront to all good citizens and, being such, should be relegated to the class of prohibited articles.

Choice of the Republican Party.

Leading republicans whom democratic organs have alleged to be opposed to the renomination of President. posed to the renomination of President Roosevelt have evidently concluded that it is time to expose the lie, and they are doing so, says the San Fran-cisco Chronicle. Within the republican party, at Washington as well as elsewhere, there is not only no "opposition" to the president, nor even "lukewarmness," but there is actual enthusiasm for his renomination. It is freely stated not only that there is no "better man" in sight, but that there could not well be any better man either as candidate or president. No other republican is seeking the nomination and nobody has ever pretended that any other could get it if he did seek it. All that the democrats have ever pretended to assert was that there was 'dissatisfaction" with the president, which, while not strong enough to prevent his nomination, might, as was intimated, induce a few disgruntled re-publicans to vote the democratic ticket.

There is nothing in this. There nev-er was anything in it. There are elements which are opposed to the exe-cution of salutory laws which are very strongly opposed to President Roosevelt because he enforces law as he finds it. Some of these men doubtless call themselves republicans. As a matter of fact they are political Ishmaelites, who will vote for the man whom they think least likely to interfere with evildoers. Some of these will very likely vote for the democratic candidate in preference to President Roosevelt. If the democratic press likes to brag about the accession of these malodor-ous recruits it is welcome to do so and to the "strength" which they can add to the democratic cause. Honest republicans and honest men are for pres-ident Roosevelt, who executes the law whatever the consequences and who is not afraid of anybody. The man who would rather be right than be president is most likely to be right and president both when the people know him as they know President Roosevelt.

Aside from the personal character of our fearless president, influential rerecognize, that it would be both foolish and dangerous to change presidents at this particular juncture. The United States is adjusting itself to the new international relations into which it en-tered as the result of the events of 1898. In the Caribbean and in the far east there are policies half worked out with whose threads and bearings the president is familiar as no other man can be. Until five or six years ago we were living on our continent in comparative isolation, concerned only with our domestic politics. Now our interests and responsibilities have suddenly expanded until we find them impinging on those of other powerful nations in ways wholly unfamiliar to our experience and traditions. The masterly handling of these delicate questions by the president and preceding administrations has excited the admiration and secured the respect and esteem of the civilized world. The president is needed to finish the work.

DRIFT OF OPINION.

Col. Bryan is not booming any particular democrat for the presidential nomination. He seems to be a sort of trustee for all the candidates.-St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The plutocrats against whom Mr. Bryan is now leveling his biggest oratorical guns are "the men who did not vote for me in 1896 and 1900." What other defeated presidential candidate ever exhibited his sore head in this man-ner and what other repudiated leader ever undertook to make loyalty to him-self a test of party membership.-Chicago Chronicle (Dem.).

IF If it were true that the democrats to lure them from idolatry of "the ury. money devil," would Mr. Bryan be the No

DUPE OF DEMOCRATS.

Another Manifestation of the Triviality of the Bursting Bryan Intellect.

"I was put in nomination twice by my party," said W. J. Bryan at Bur-lington, N. J., "only because it was Oxygen and Other Powerful Stimuknown that there was no chance for my election." This is a most remarkable utterance

It is a public confession by Mr. Bryan that in both his presidential campaigns he was a dupe-that from the beginning by his own party he was betrayed and befooled, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

There is some reason to believe that with refernce to his nomination in 1900 Mr. Bryan's opinion is partially correct There doubtless were democratic leaders then who saw no way of ridding their party of the incubus of Bryanism save by letting Mr. Bryan run again and be defeated.

But there is not one scintilla of evidence that any such conspiracy as Mr. Bryan charges existed in 1890—not even in the form of passive acquiescence in Mr. Bryan's aspirations, destructive as they were seen to be. None who saw the Chicago convention of 1896—saw the wrathful, prayerful, and even tearful energy with which many democrats there strove to withstand the Bryanite frenzy—can enter-tain such an idea for a moment.

Three hours or so Nor was 'this energy displayed by the later, however, he had shaken off the attack to so great an extent that Dr. Osler, the Baltimore physician in atonservative democrats alone. Scores of men in that convention were as radtendance, as he came from the sick room at 9:35 o'clock said that there had been a decided improvement and ical for free silver as Mr. Bryan. Yet they regarded the stampede to Mr. as a treacherous desertion of Bryan that the patient's pulse was much stronger and had fallen nearly 20 Mr. Bland. All through the hours between Mr. Bryan's "Cross of Gold" points speech and the actual nomination these men argued and pleaded, with tears in their eyes and until they could hardly on continued at least to hold the ral-ly he had shown and at 11 o'clock the stand or speak, with delegates not to desert, "Old Silver Dick"-the man who had worked all his life for silver and deserved the reward of that issue's triumph in his party. During his European tour Mr. Bry-an is said to have been fully converted to the theory of Tolstoi, that any man who serves his fellow men under present conditions must be a martyr. This pessimistic theory may account for Mr. Bryan's description of himself as a publicans recognize, as the people will dupe. However that may be, Mr. Bryan's mentality has long been known to be trivial. His presentation of himself as a martyr or dupe is probably, in the light of the facts of 1896, only another instance of his customary mental petti-

Reformers Have Poor Prospect of Securing Revision of the Ex-isting Schedule.

Tariff reformers in congress are disconcerted over the legislative plans of the leaders. The western members who favor a revision of the customs duties to meet changed conditions were encouraged by the general un-derstanding which prevailed that after the presidential campaign something would be done to revise certain objectionable schedules. They are awakening to the fact that the growing demands upon the public treasury will, before this congress has ad-journed, reach such proportions as nearly to equal the surplus, if not actually cause a deficit, says a Washington special to the Chicago Record-Herald.

While these republican members are not opposed to a service pension bill and the Panama canal project, they are beginning to realize the appropiations carried by the first measure, which will amount to $30,000,000 annually, and the enormous outlay involved in the completion of the isthmian waterway, taken in addition to the regular appropriations, will bring the total ex-penditures to unusual proportions. Next session, or the session following, a river and harbor and a public buildneeded a missionary to inspire their ing bill will come in to further swell hearts and minds with higher ideals, the demands upon the public treas-

Although they have not abandoned hope, these western republicans appreciate that conditions are against them, and are doing a great deal of talking among themselves to discover the remedy.

Senate Agrees to Vote on It Before February 23–Rights of Senate Said to Have Been Encroached Upon by Senator Hanna Was Near to Various Presidents – Action Taken on St. Louis World's Fair Loan. Death's Door.

Washington, Feb. 12 .- The senate will vote on the Panama canal treaty on some day between February 15 and 23. An agreement was reached in executive session yesterday to take action on Monday next, to decide upon a time for voting on the treaty and it was determined that such date Washington, Feb. 13.—Senator Han-na is passing through the climax of his illness and Friday afternoon it was feared he was dying, but last night he rallied strongly ad there is again some hope that he may win the forlorn fight. The odds are much paralast his measure but the structure should be on or before February 23. The senate was in executive ses-sion more than four hours and after the agreement to vote on the treaty had been reached nearly the entire time was devoted to discussion of the encroachments of the senate and the president on each other's preroga-tives under the constitution. Sena-tor Teller in a speech lasting more than two hours and filled with inciphysique of the man, aided by oxygen and powerful stimulants, brought him through when he was sinking rapidly and possibly may again. It is now a question how long the cli-max of the fever will last and how many and severe will be any further acute attacks, for yesterday's spell was so severe that another probably would witness the end dents where he alleged the president had encroached on the senate in re-gard to the making of federal appointments, aroused a number of the republican leaders to the defense of President Roosevelt. Some of the re-publicans agreed with Senator Teller that there have been many encroach-ments from the White House on the rights of the senate.

The political phases of the debate were finally eliminated with the re-sult that several administrations were discussed and brought under the ban of disapproval. The first was the Cleveland administration in which it was said that the president used undue influence for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act.

President McKinley's Influence on republican members of the senate for the ratification of the Paris treaty and President Roosevelt's pressure in bringing about the ratification of the Construction and the little in the In bringing about the ratification of the Cuban treaty and also the influ-ence he has brought to bear looking to the ratification of the Panama canal treaty were cited as instances in which the senate has not been left free to deal with these topics ac-cording to individual judgmet.

During the discussion of the pure food hill in the house attention was called to the provision for the confiscation of all impure or adulterated food. "When Spain passed a pure food law it was decided that all impure, adulterated and poisonous foods confiscated should be distributed among the charitable institutions."
