Theodore Roosevelt.

Theodore Roosevelt is a man of des Theodore Roosevelt is a man of destiny. His star does not follow the aberrations of the meteor; it has its sure pathway; but old rules and precedents do not bind its flight No Vice-President who came to the Presidency through the death of his chief was ever before nominated for the first place. The traditions were all against it. But Theodore Roosevelt had not been six months in the chair before it was plain that he was predestined for was plain that he was predestined for 1904. His fate is altogther exceptional. That is the touchstone of his quality and career.

He had a task far harder than any

He had a task far harder than any Vice-President thus succeeding, except Andrew Johnson, and the wayward, besotted Johnson is out of all comparison. Roosevelt followed the best beloved of all Presidents save Lincoln. McKinley had won the unbounded confidence of the country. He was gentle, gracious, wise, consummate, sure in his instincts, masterful in his methods. The people of all parties mate, sure in his instincts, masterful in his methods. The people of all parties implicity trusted him. When they were suddenly berefit of him by the assassin's hand they shuddered and trembled. Roosevelt was entirely-different in temperament and organization and methods. He had been driven by events upon untried seas. Would the new hand be as firm on the helm? Would the ship of state go forward with so sure and calm and steady a course?

with so sure and calm and steady a course?
Within a week Roosevelt had allayed fears; within a month he had established faith; within half a year he had won full confidence and made his future and the country's secure. He was great enough to grasp and carry forward McKinley's policies without a break, and great enough to meet new questions and new emergencies without a quiver. As wide apart in temperament as the poles, the dead chieftain and the new President had the same principles, the same virtues and the same purposes. They could not same principles, the same virtues and the same purposes. They could not have been alike if they had tried, there could be no imitation; but with the same chart and the same compass the lines already fixed were faithfully followed and the new occasions were unhesitatingly faced.

President Roosevelt's character is an open book. Above all things he is frank, open and unequivocal. From the first he has taken the country into his confidence, and in turn the country his confidence, and in turn the country into his confidence, and in turn the country gives its full confidence to him. Impulsive?—yes, but with an unerring instinct for the right. Self-reliant?—yes, but with the anchor of supreme loyalty pulsive?—yes, but with an unerring instinct for the right. Self-reliant?—yes, but with the anchor of supreme loyalty to duty. Original and unique?—yes, but with the safety of fixed and sure ideals. He has in exalted measure the great fundamental virtues, truth, purity, uprightness, patriotism, probity and courage. He is as brave as a lion and as honest as the daylight. He has a lofty ideal of the public service and is faithful to its standard. He measures up to the mark of duty himself, and is rigid in his exactions on those around him. He belongs to the rare type of men endowed with the genius of great and arduous achievement. Men compare him, not inaptly, with Emperor William, and his vived personality inspires the unstinted trifiute, perhaps excessive, of such sober historical students as James Bryce. However observers differ in their estimates, none fail to recognize his powerful individuality, his instant perception and his vital, virile action.

If President Roosevelt's service were to end this year his administration would always live as one of the great historical administrations of the country. In strength of impress, in vigor of leadership, in originality and breadth of achievement it ranks among the foremost. It points to a distinct group of memorable results. It has confirmed, broadened and vivified the Monroe Doctrine and secured a more explicit recognition of it from the world than has ever been given before. It has lifted and widened the principle of arbitration It has reorganized the American army on a sound and enduring foundation. It has brought the practical and splendid fulfillment through the dramatic creation of the Panama Republic and the triu mphant assurance of the Panama Canal. It has græboled with the great problem of the control of trusts, and has given a new security to sound business and a new protection to popular rights by blazing the way to the lawfuljregulation of corporations and combinations which may menace the public interests. It has by strong and masterful diplomacy in Eu brought the United States to a new height of prestige and influence and to new opportunities of commercial ex-pansion.

The great record of which this is only a part justifies and emphasizes the appeal for continued confidence among the part justifies and emphasizes the appeal for continued confidence among the part justifies and their eyes to the record and try to make battle on a personality. So be it. Welcome the issue! The record and the record-maker are inseparable. The Opposition say he is not safe. But where is the act, bold and vigorous as it may have been, that was unsafe? They say he has assumed power. But were has he overstepped the law or where has he asserted himself that was not for the public welfare? They say were has he overstepped the law or where has he asserted himself that was not for the public welfare? They say he is self-willed. But where in any emergency has he failed to take the wisest and best counsel? Strong, earnest, intense he is, with all the energy of his robust intellect and all the enthusiasm of his true heart, but at the same time with the poise of purpose and restraint of experience.

Let the personal issue come. He is no decorous nobody, no negative figured head, no stuffed prophet. He is picturesque, ardent, wholesome, the biggest boy on the playground, the biggest boy on the playground, the biggest how on the playground, the biggest man in the battle. Underneath the roughness of the cabinet is the substance of greatness and the fineness of the lofty ideal. The people like his fiber and his quality. They liked it when, with the sound of war, he put aside the bureau and put himself at the front. They liked it when, while the homes of the millions shivered and the comfortable coal chiefs looked askance, he commanded peace and settlement. He will not cease to be interesting so comfortable coal chiefs looked askance, he commanded peace and settlement. He will not cease to be interesting, so long as he is on the stage of action. His country will not cease to be respected and reckoned with so long as he holds the scepter. It is not in his nature to fall short of the full stature of his place. He has not only filled the measure of the Presidency but he has made himself the undisputed leader of the party. His nomination by acclamation and his election with only a feeble and shattered opposition will give him a unique title to distinction in the world's history.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, June 25th, 1904.

The President was early at his desk Thursday morning, attending to the every day humdrum labors of his official position, calm, serene and industrious, notwithstanding the Republican convention was in session at Chicago which would nominate him for the Presidency. At noon he had as a dinner guest for the second time Mr. Paul Morton, who had again hurried from the west to talk over situation. now understood that the President has induced him to accept the position of Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Moody becoming At-torney General. The President appoints Mr. Morton because he has a high opinion of his ability and thinks him the best man for the place. Mr. Morton's recent conversion to Republicanism is regarded as a good thing, and may have some influence on the vote in Nebraska. It is also recalled that Mr. Dominie I. Murphy, re-cently appointed Secretary of the Panama Commission, is a Democrat and under Cleveland was Assistant Commissioner of Pensions. And Gen. Black, now Chief of the Civil Service Commission was also a good Democrat in the days of Cleveland. Nevertheless, all these oppointments have been well received and they help to break down party lines.

The President was sitting on the south porch of the White House when at 2:13 p. m., Thursday, his Secretary, Mr. Loeb, brought the telegram announcing the fact of his nomination. He received it calmly and coolly and was at once congratulated by his wife, and such members of his family as were present. The next telegram came in hot haste from Senator Fairbanks in which he said how glad he was to run on the same ticket with the President. A cordial reply followed. After this congratulations began to pour in from all quarters; from the Indiana delega-tion in Congress, from Whitelaw Reid; from Senators Aldrich, Alger, and even Senator Smoot, while the citizens of Oyster Bay said they were firing guns and il-luminating their houses. The formal notification of the nomination will be made at Oyster Bay, June 27, for which place Mrs. Roosevelt left yesterday. The nominating speeches made at Chi-cago, and the platform adopted, give universal satisfaction and are regarded as of the highest character and of the utmost importance for not only Americans, but for all civilized nations.

Secretary Hay's dispatch to the American consul at Tangier on Wednesday, which electrified the Chicago Convention, also sent a welcome thrill throughout the country. It indicates that if Morocco did not use a little more dispatch, and secure the release of Perdicaris, the Government of the United States had the power and the purpose to enforce its demands. Mr. Perdicaris is not a "natural-Mr. Perdicaris is not a "naturalized" citizen, as has been stated, but is a native American, born in Trenton, N. J. His father was at one time a professor in Harvard University. His release and return to Tangier yesterday gives high satisfaction to President Roosavelt. Roosevelt.
