WINGATE, MISS., March 1, 1906.

DEAR HARRY In answer to your request some time ago to write a letter for publication, I have put down a few facts as they came to me to-day, as I am convalescing from the effects of too strenuou efforts put forth out in the woods last week, and I hope these retrospective lines will not jar your nerves too severely, old boy.

The recent investigations into "Frenzied Finance" and the conduct and methods of life in-surance companies in handling the funds of their policy holders, railroad mergers, steel, beef and oil trusts, etc., together with the history of the great body of wealthy men, who have been posing great body of weathy men, who have been posting before the public during the recent years as "Captains of Industry," some of whom have turned literary and wrote for the maggalnes arti-cles on advices to young men, etc. These inves-tigations have not in all cases stood the test of he search-light, much less the investigation into heir business methods and political intrigue.

prominently. In scaning this list of powerful wealthy financiers and "Gréat Captains of Indus-try," do you find a single name of one who took any conspicuous or subordinste part in the civil war for the preservation of the union, although the average ages of these men show they were men in full vigor and health during the war period?

These men, as a rule, if living near the theatre of excitement and danger, became army supply contractors, and when living in remote points and could see with a clearer vision the evident out-come of the war, who possessed the cool and calculating judgment and hard sense that enabled them to lay the foundation of their fortunes, by reason of the inflation of high prices and subs quent development of the country, in railroad, iron and lumber and other ways augmented by unprecedented emigration. The lamentable fact remains, in numerous instances, where these same men by means of their wealth thus acquired during the period of strife, became in later years the purchasing power in practical politics and secured to themselves the fruits that really and justly belonged to others.

These men could be relied upon for large contributions to campaign funds, either for the pur-pose of effecting favorable legislation or silencing unfavorable legislation.

In some notable instances, in close political sections, business firms made it convenient, (not from principle, but for policy sake), to be divided in their political affiliations so as to catch the favors, "both the comin" and the goin'," as the darkey says.

The men who were embued with true patriotic fervor and interest in the stability of our institutions, enrolled themselves in defense of their country and made sacrifices in many other ways, and when the war ended, they came home with a sense of duty well performed and were satisfied with the plaudits of a grateful people. By reason of this sense of self satisfaction, became by degrees, not intentionally but nevertheless true, the dupes of these very men who remained at home; who, as occasion seemed to require, spend lavishly for political meetings, brass bands, excursions, dinners, and encourage, if not pay for, "Bloody Shirt" orators to harangue the people to keep up excitement and blind them to the true fects. darkey says.

to keep up excitement and blind them to the true feets.

The ground work and bulwark of our country lies in the hands of the great body of common people. The "Blue Bloods" and so-called 40¢, are not to be depended upon in any cricis.

It is dangerous to attempt to "tool all the people all the time." Lincoin said it could not be done. The few real statesmen whom the people love to honor are now, and have been, men of small means. The high officials who pose as statesmen and have made their millions, aithough had nothing to build it on except the government salary paid them in installments, made it by graft and boodle or tampering with either state or National campaign funds. The political statesmen powerful trust company or corporation, or by the power secured in successfully shaking the grafted plumb tree of debauchery, will be burried in oblivion, and whose memory will ever be associated with everything tending to degrade humanity.

It does not seem possible, yet I firmly believe it true, that the great wave of political reform sweeping in its path States, Governments, cities and towns, is the culmination of resistance of the common people to the encreachment of aggran dized wealth, wrongly and unlawfully used; it debasing, debauching and the gradual breaking down of the old-fashioned standard of morai among the people and the wealth thus acquired what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil what could be called the aftermath of the civil which was a civil when the civil

The South also had its share of the aftermath, but it came immediately after the war, during the days of reconstruction, and its effect has passed away. It is singularly free from the abuses as exposed in St. Louis, Chicago, Clincinnati, Philadeiphia and Pittsburg. It is difficult to decide whether Pennsylvania should be free or not, from the political Boss. I suppose it is like a man living on poor fare so long that hebecame used to it and prefers it to something good is one reason the people submit to impositions and high taxes. The people of Pennsylvania are taxed more and the corporations less than anywhere else, and yet they vote to continue the Bosses in power. I drank in Republican principles from the spigot in Freemon's campaign in 1866 and rode with the was and rail splitting," campaign of 1860. "Without the was and rail splitting," campaign of 1860.
