Helliker went over in Mr. Helliker's auto and took in the celebration. Mr. and Mrs. Elias Cramer visited their old home at Williamsport last week. Our old friend Chas. McLeis writes us from Powersville, Iowa, enclosing a draft for the Press well into 1907, and adds a few lines, viz: "We cannot afford to miss a number—it's a letter from home, you see. My family and I are enjoying good health. I had hoped to get back and see the old neighbors of Little Cameron but alas! the summer is so short. I hope to see friend Judge Green nominated and elected." Jos. A. Kinsler and family kindly remembers the Press with posts from Germany and Switzerland. They are with Hon. and Mrs. F. X. Humble and daughter and report "having a fine time and are well." They receive the Press every week. We thank our friends for their remembrance and shall keep the posts as mementos of their trip. Chas. Papazzoni, Geo. Beattie, C. A. Blair and Chas. Leutz, remembered the Press with posts from Williamsport. Thanks, boys. Howard & Co. have received from the Pacific Coast what is perhaps the finest lot of RED CEDAR shingles that ever came to Cameron county. WANTED—Girl to do general housework and one who will stay at her own home at nights. Apply at Press office. The whipping post is the only real punishment for a man, may be ca'led such, who goes home filled up with bad "booze" and beats his wife. There are such people in every town we are sorry to say and the whipping post or a coat of tar and feathers would be most appropriate for an individual of this stripe. Many a man goes to congress with an empty dinner pail. But when he returns it's different. CONSUMPTION'S WARNING Inside facts soon become evident in outside symptoms.—Dr. G. G. GREEN. The aid of scientific inventions is not needed to determine whether your lungs are affected. The first symptoms can be readily noted by anyone of average intelligence. There is no disease known that gives so many plain warnings of its approach as consumption, and no serious disease that can be so quickly reached and checked, if the medicine used is Dr. Boschee's German Syrup, which is made to cure consumption. It is in the early stages that German Syrup should be taken, when warnings are given in the cough that won't quit; the congestion of the bronchial tubes and the gradual weakening of the lungs, accompanied by frequent expectoration. But no matter how deep-seated your cough, even if dread consumption has already attacked your lungs, German Syrup will surely effect a cure—as it has done before in thousands of apparently hopeless cases of lung trouble. New trial bottles, 25c. Regular size, 75c. At all druggists. R. C. DODSON.

METZGER. Continued from first Page. caused profound sorrow in this community. Miss Metzger was for several years in charge of the Department of Vocal Music at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and was widely known in this city. Her activities touched our social and intellectual life at so many points and always with such beneficent grace, that the intelligence of her death brings a sense of irreparable loss. An artist of pronounced ability and unusual conscientiousness, she left her impress wherever her work was done. But not only within the sphere of her legitimate labors was her influence felt; it reached out far beyond and blessed and brightened everything and everybody with which it came in contact. Her musical conceptions and standards were pure and high; as an interpreter of her art she has never had a superior in our midst, and she was equally gifted as an inspirer of genuine appreciation and of musical feeling. Rarely has a woman so richly endowed been among us, for in addition to her genius for music, she possessed a marked talent for art. Indeed, at one time it was a question whether she should pursue music or painting as a career. And cementing these beautiful gifts was a personality so magnetic, a womanliness so strong and tender, a kindness of such exquisite sympathy and generosity, a character of so noble fibre that one was tempted to forget the artist in the creature. How many acts of disinterested goodness can we recall of her who has gone! The memories of her fair life weave themselves into the harmonies she wrought and linger around us as breathing sympathy. In that high realm wherein she walked, how well did she exemplify the real unity between Art and Ethics—the one Indivisible Beauty that gathers into its imperishable radiance all thought and living. REV. O. S. METZLER SAYS. I had planned to go to Emporium to-day that I might attend by my presence, simply silently, at the funeral my profound regard for the one so loved and esteemed and respected by us all but the placing of the services for Sunday will render my attendance impossible and I feel that I must further and more fully express my deep sorrow of heart and the sense of sympathy, sincere, that I continue to feel toward all upon whom this bereaving stroke has fallen so heavily. When I received the news in my home the tears started to my eyes and from the shock occasioned I do not and cannot recover. There is something inexpressibly sad and mysterious in this soul so dependent on the ministries of others and with others so dependent on her ministrations, so clinging to life in every fiber of her being, so in love with life and fitted in all the amplitude and fullness of her powers for its utmost requirements, to go down into the silences and shadows, and that under circumstances from which we all instinctively recoil, is baffling to the finite understanding and to unravel the mystery or mitigate the grief that has gathered around so many hearts is something that I will not attempt. I have as much need to be comforted as to administer cheer and would I be at the funeral, the attitude most befitting my feelings would be absolute non-participation. Others may tell the story of her life, its self-getfulness, its struggles, its triumphs, its devotion to the welfare of others. Her essential strength, strength of will, of energy, of industry of patience, constantly impressed me. To accomplish what she did was not easy, but her will was strong enough to compel her life to do noble service and to achieve results scarcely short of wonderful. She was a true woman. No one could come within the sphere of her presence and not feel all that was true, chivalrous and manly going out toward the woman at his side. It was the fine potent power of her femininity, her gentleness, her goodness, her sincerity and purity, that evoked all that was reverent in the human heart. One of the finest things that can be said about her was that she had troops of friends among all classes. On the public side of her life she had deserved honor and on the private side she had honor and reverent affection. But she has gone from mortal sight but not from the sight of the soul. She has gone from the sorrows and pains and perplexities of life but she has passed into the morning of immortality. We all know of her love for the summers spent in Emporium, and with what pleasure she hailed the return of her annual vacation period. She frequently said to me that it made her stronger in health and steeper in nerves to spend the bright summer days amid the beautiful hills of her girlhood home. She said these days made her better in every way and in fact were necessary to her in the restored energy it gave her for her arduous work, to be taken up with the resumption of the school term. But with the home-coming this year, there were greener pastures and purer breezes awaiting her and she was not long to remain away from them. Apropos of these words of our own Whittier. God giveth quietness at last. The common way that all must pass. She went with mortal yearning fond, To fuller life and love beyond. I am truly your friend, O. S. METZLER.
