The inhabitants were chary of entrust-ing themselves to the elevator in the Bailey Building, for it was connected with an electric motor of such unstable character that the initiated had lost all confidence in it as a means of transporta-the long, leather-covered seat. Westcott, at the extreme other end, stared gloomily at the wall.

Katherine looked at her watch. It was already past lunchedn time, and she had been too miserable to eat much breakfast. Still—she brightened at the thought—she should not starve, for she had with her a box of chocolates she was taking home to her sister's children.

She looked at her watch again. Only four minutes had passed, but pains of hunger were becoming uneitdurable. The chubby boy munched peanuts with apparently no thought of his fellow sufferers. Katherine untied the pink string that bound the candy box, unfolded the paper, lifted up the lid and ate a chocolate. When she had eaten three she glanced at Westcott. He was still gazing at the wall. The walls in clevator shafts are seldom interesting. This one was tinted with a billous green—a color that Westcott abhorred.

Westcott, with an air of exaggerated

Katherine nibbled a bonbon, waited in silence for ten min-utes, and again offered the box to West-cott, who gravely helped himself. This operation was repeated until only one remained in the box. The remaining one

FADS AND FANCIES. MINNA SCHATT CRAWFORD.

The woman who studies the importance of dress very quickly discovers that it does not necessarily require rich qualities or costly fabrics to give the magic touch of style, but that this wonderful transforming quality or essence is more closely allied with the lines and the cut of a woman's clother than with the magic to the control of the control o of a woman's clothes than with the ma-terials of which they are made. with every reason to expect a swift and uneventful journey to the street, stepped confidently into the elevator.

At the fourth floor the elevator stopped to admit a second passenger, a man named Westcott. Westcott differed from Katherine in that he entered the cagelike apartment with full knowledge of its treacherous tendencies, but Westcott was that morning in a frame of mind to court disaster. He assured himself as he stepped in that it was a matter of complete indifference to him whether the elevator shot suddenly upward and crashed through the skylight or dropped without warning into the basement.

The elevator, however, did beither of these things. Under the guidance of a chubby, blue-eyed youth, it pursued its downward career until it reached the space between the first and second floors; there it stopped.

At the sight of her fellow passenger Katherine had turned pink with embarrassment. The man had muttered something under his breath and bowed frigidly; for, before courting disaster, he had courted Katherine—apparently it had amounted to the same thing. They had parted forever only the evening before, and the ring she had worn for three months was at that moment in Westcott's trousers pocket, where lie had thrust it savagely at the end of their quarrel.

"Why are we stopping here?" asked Katherine, turning to the elevator boy of cherubic countenance.

"Cause we can't go on," returned the yor producing a bag of peanuts and a dime novel, and proceeding to make himself comfortable. "The blamed power's off." "Has it ever—does it often go off like this?"

The charming Princess Dress here portrayed is beautifully adapted for an evening or dancing frock. It is one of hose rare models so ingeniously con-"How he must hate me," thought Katherine, eating another chocolate, "when he'd rather look at a wall than at me. I wonder what I ought to do? If we were utter strangers, cast away on a desert isle and he had one biscuit and three drops of water, I should think him horrid if he didn't offer me half. I suppose I ought to offer him some of these chocolates, even if we're not on speaking terms."

Katherine, sitting very straight, and with her eyes straight ahead, pushed the box along the seat. Westcott paid no attention.

"Do I understand that you are offering me a heart?" asked Wescott.

"It's your turn," said Katherine, flushing a beautiful crimson.

Westcott took something that glittered from his pocket, laid it in the box beside the chocolate heart, and pushed the box toward Katherine. "Do we trade even?" he asked, with his eyes on Katherine's. The elevator boy, agog with excitement, retired discreetly, but with reluctance to the pages of his novel, but not before he had recognized in the glittering chiest a first

Then the boy moved the lever slowly, even reluctantly, and the elevator dropped gently to the ground floor.

"Oh!" exclaimed Katherine, drawing her hand gently from Westcott's and giving, a long sigh. "We're actually down."

The approaching cool evenings emphasize the need of a suitable loose fitting coat. In the design here pictured we show a coat that is equally handsome for daytime wear, either for the street or driving or motoring, and is amply loose and large enough to wear evenings over a pretty party frock without crushing. The pattern No. 1969 is in seven-eighths length and is cut in sizes 32, 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. Price 15 cents.

Misses' Jacket Suit of ruby Panama cloth. The jacket, No. 1901, is a semifitted model of the stylish type known as the pony coat. It is cut in sizes for 12, 14 and 16 years. Price 15 cents.

The Misses' Skirt No. 1902 is in five gores, with a double inverted plait at center back. It is cut in sizes for 12, 14 and 16 years. Price 15 cents.

To obtain these patterns promptly, state number and size of pattern, and enclose fifteen cents for each pattern desired. Be sure to give correct size of pattern. Address all communications to Fashion Correspondent, 6032 Metropolitan Bldg., New York City.

Superstitions of Sailors

Supersitions of Sailors

All sailors are supersitious, and the legends of the sea are legion, ranging from phantoin ships to spectral lights and suddenly gleaming from yardarms and mastheads. That many of these legends are very ancient may be proved by the fact that sea harpies are described by Homer and Hesiod, while according to Virgil they plundered Æneas during his voyage to Italy. The beautiful sirens, too, are of classic origin.

Weird, indeed, are the tales of haunting spectres, fit to send one's nerves a-shivering after a hearty supper, well suited for Christmas-time ghost stories. There are the four Goblins of Dunter's Ness, not ghosts, but evil water spirits, who appear twice a year, only in midwinter, but bring bad luck in a very short time to the ship from which they are sighted.

We must mention Adamaster, the dreaded Ghost of the Cape, that used to be seen in a halo of cloud and mist over Good Hope, and also the silent man of Weyford Harbor, the wandering over Good Hope, and also the silent man of Wexford Harbor, the wandering soul of the Dutch skipper who lost his smack on his way to Dublin some three smack on his way to Dublin some three centuries ago.

Ghostly apparitions are not, however, the only ones to be feared at sea. In the case of St. Elmo's fire these apparitions take the shape of spectral lights suddenly gleaming from yardarms or mastheads. It was known by ancient navigators as Castor and Pollux—the best omen if seen double, but a signal danger if seen single.

"It's a heart!" exclaimed the elevator boy, who had read too many dime nowels not to recognize an interesting situation when he was face to face with one, and who was unable to contain himself longer. "You'll have to toss up for it, I guess. It is a heart, ain't it?"

"Why, so it is," replied Katherine. "Will you have it, Bobs—pardon me—Mr. Westcott?"

Westcott shot a quick glance at Katherine, who had gradually moved two feet

What Dewey is Doing

What Dewey is Doing
"What has become of Admiral George Dewey, and what is he doing now?"
Taken all in all, there is perhaps no man in the United States, in the service of the government or out of it, who is in a more enviable position than Admiral Dewey. Congress has given him the rank, pay and allowances of an admiral of the navy, reviving the rank for his benefit. He is absolutely independent of the Secretary of the Navy and of the President of the United States.
He cannot be retired and he cannot be disciplined by reduction in rank or any of the other usual means employed. The place gives him an annual income of

place gives him an annual income of $15,500.

If he chose to do so, he could close down his desk, go home, and never turn his hand over in the way of work, either for the navy or any one else, and his pay and allowances would go on as long as he lives; but the admiral prefers to work and to work hard.

He is at the head of the navy general board, charged with the duty of devising general plans for improvement of the navy, the management of the ships, the handling of officers and men, and the control of the great government shipvards. Every day when he is not at sea for the maneuvers he is at his desk in his office or attending the meetings of the board.

Admiral Dewey is much loved and much respected. He is a dapper little fellow, not much more than five feet in height. His clothes fit him like the naval miform, without crease or bag any

They do say that the admiral's Chinese valet has no less than twenty new suits of clothes and ten pairs of shoes to take care of at a time. The admiral is not dude, merely a well groomed man with or clothes and ten pairs of shoes to take care of at a time. The admiral is not a dude, merely a well groomed man without seeming to have any thought of his personal appearance.

He has but one fad, if fad it may be called, and that is his love for animals. He has one of the finest teams of driving horses in the city and also an ugly looking English bulldog. The dog went through the battle of Manila Bay with Dewey, so they are real bunkies.

When the admiral was making a tour of inspection of the fleet the dog went along, and was allowed the run of a vessel while his master was aboard. On one ship the admiral returned from the men's quarters just in time to encounter the dog sailing in most hurried fashion from the officer's boot in hot pursuit.

Admiral Dewey was white with anger and surprise. In a second, when the captain appeared, following the direction of the toe of his boot, the admiral, controlling himself as best he could, demanded:

"Sir, what do you mean by kicking my dog in that manner?"

The captain came to a swift salute, and his face, it was noted, was as pale and drawn with suppressed anger as was that of the admiral.

"Sir" he said, "I would have kicked that dog if he had been the personal property of the Supreme Being; but, sir, I would not have kicked him, and did not kick him, until he had chewed the legs out of two $15 pairs of uniforn trousers and ruined a de luxe edition of the Naval Regulations, as well as killed the ship's feline mascot."

Then they both laughed.

Depth of Ocean Cables

Depth of Ocean Cables

Pessimistic prophets sometimes sound sage and logical, but the unreasoning optimist who sees better things despite argument outstrips them.

In the days of Stephenson's early experiments it was predicted that a speed of more than twelve miles an hour by rail would be impracticable, if for no other reason than that the human system would not withstand traveling at a higher rate of speed.

In the early days of steamboats it was declared that transatlantic steam navigation would be impossible, mainly because of the inability to provide room aboard of the inability to provide room aboard ship for the coal that would be necessary for the voyage. The prophet had scarcely done speaking when the news arrived that a ship had just finished a trip across the Atlantic under steam.

So with transatlantic cables. Some promulgated the belief that they could never be laid because the density of the water below a certain depth would be so great that the cable would not sink to the bottom of the ocean. All the wise folk regardless, however, the cable promptly descended to the ocean bed at

A Wife's Reproach.

Admiral Capps, in an address to a temperance society, told how drink had once caused the downfall of a brave soldier. In the course of the sad story he said:

"Sometimes after a debauch the man would be repentant, humble. He would promise his wife to do better. But, alas the years taught her the barrenness of all such promises. "And one night, when he was getting

They had a lot of things to tell each other. "Sure, it's married I am," said Murphy. "You don't tell me so," said Murphy. "You don't tell me so," said for a five got a fine, healthy bhoy which the neighbors say is the very picture of me."
At this juncture in the talk Moran eloked for a moment at Murphy, who was not, to say the least, remarkable for his good looks, and then said, "Och, well, what's the harum so long as the child's healthy?" ach other for a long time met at a fair modern St. Patrick. He recently declared war on the snakes that infest his large estate at Pocantico Hills and twenty-five cents is paid for every one to be an old man-a prematurely old killed and brought to his superintendent. The following notice was sent out a short time ago:

> "I will pay twenty-five cents for each snake killed on my estate. I desire to rid my land of these reptiles, and any one may enter the war of extermination. "JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER."

The war has begun, and the regimen of extermination consists of every small boy in the neighborhood and many men who come from miles around to earn the quarters. The region of Buttermilk Hill is about the wildest in the county, and here blacksnakes, copperheads and garter snakes abound.

Mr. Rockefeller always has been deathly afraid of snakes. If he has oc-casion to go to the Buttermilk Hill section he always travels in a carriage

Mr. Rockefeller also offers two dollars for every dog killed on his estate. Some valuable dogs were killed last winter and he had some trouble with his neighbors. William Rockefeller offered twentyfive cents for all snakes killed on his place for several years, and now it is free of the reptiles.
