WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
Washington, Dec. 8, 1906.

Congress has gotten started in good shape, and the only trouble with one who is trying to keep abreast of happiness under the dome is to select the most interesting of the many things that are happening every day. The Ship Subsidy Bill, the Currency Bill, the 25th Infantry fight, the Deep Waterways Congress, the Japanese row, the Bailey case and the coal lands inquiry, are all very urgent to the front. It is safe to say that some of them will soon become exhausted and dropped to the rear but at the present moment there is plenty doing.

One of the most talked about, although not the most important propositions, is the possible new Japanese treaty. This while a possibility, is not at all probable. The Japanese situation was given a fresh flip by the President's reference to the subject in his message. The people of the Pacific coast immediately got up in arms, and the most urgent question asked was what the President meant by reference to the use of military force on behalf of the Japanese in California. This was an expression perhaps unfortunate in that it revived the old question of State's rights. It was explained, after the President's interview with Senator Perkins, on the basis that what the President meant was merely that the assistance of the military forces would be used if necessary to protect the Japanese on this coast from physical violence. Now there has never been any danger of physical violence; and the contingency of military intervention is so remote that it is almost a pity the phrase was ever used at all. As to the treaty, there is no likelihood of such a document being submitted to the Senate until the question of the Japanese school children in San Francisco is settled. What the people of the Pacific coast want is a Japanese treaty on the same basis as that with China, to exclude Japanese laborers. There is no likelihood that Japan would ever consent to such an agreement. Certainly it cannot be brought up until the question of school exclusion is settled, and after that is settled to the satisfaction of the westerners, it is not likely that Japan would consent to an exclusion act, even if it came to entirely breaking off diplomatic relations.

A very interesting device was installed in the Capitol this week by which it will be possible for a member to sit in his Committee room and hear by telephone all the proceedings on the floor of the House or Senate. The new machine is merely an adaptation of the old microphone, which has been known to scientists for the past fifteen years, but its practical application to the Capitol is a new development, and it is permanently installed may result in Congressmen never having to go to the floor of the House or Senate but gleaning all their impressions of the debates from microphone conversations and a perusal of the Congressional record.
