This is the season of the year when the housewife's nimble fancy turns to the making and baking of Christmas sweets and cakes. The flavoring ex-tracts which enter into the composition of these goodies are not only expensive, but much given to adulteration. There is but one safe way to get sure and pure flavoring extract at little cost and pure flavoring extracts at little cost, and that is by preparing them at home. The sense of security one feels, the rich delicacy of the flavoring, and the very great saving in money are more than sufficient compensation for the little trouble involved.

trouble involved. In a recent article in Good Houss-keeping on the quality of flavoring ex-tracts, R. O. Brooks, formerly State Chemist of New Jersey, and food in-spection expert of the Pennsylvania dairy and food commission, writes as follows: "Chemical analysis proves the astonishing fact that out of sixty-two brands of flavoring extracts purchased in the open market, only twenty-six were found to be legally pure." "Of the eight brands of vanilla extract found to be adulterated or of very poor quality, two were found to contain wood alcohol. The use of wood alcohol, the injurious effect of which on the optic nerve is an established scientific fact, in a household preparation used in food (and frequently, as in ice cream, not dis-sipated by cooking) is reprehensible, in fact, criminal. It constitutes one of the classed as dangerous to health, the great majority of food adulterants being worthless, fraudulent or inferior, but harmless substitutes, which cheat our In a recent article in Good House-
