FRIEND TO FRIEND.

The personal recommendations of people who have been cured of coughs and colds by Chamberlain's have done more than an erso wo make it a staple article of trade and commerce over a large part of the civilized world.

"And would you advise me a little? I have nobody else to ask. My mother and I know no one at Monte Carlo. Perhaps you would walk with me on the terrace and let me talk?"

"Not on the terrace," he said quickly, for he could not bear to meet the sweet ghost of the past in the white dress and ermine stole as he gave advice to the flesh and blood reality of the present in the pink frock and roses. "What about Ciro's? Couldn't we find your mother somewhere and get her to chaperon us for lunch? I should think it must be very jolly now in the Galerie Charles Trois."

"So it would be, but my poor mother is very ill in her bed," said

"Would she-er-do you think, as I'm an American and we're almost old friends, mind letting you have lunch just with me alone? Of course if she would mind you must say no. But I must confess I'm hungry as a wolf, and it would be somewhere to sit and talk together quietly, you know."

"You are hungry?" echoed the girl. "Ah, I would wager something that you don't really know what hunger is. But I knownow."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean it is well my mother is ill and doesn't wish to eat, for there would be nothing for her if she did." "Good heavens! And you?"

"I have had nothing to eat since yesterday morning, and then only a biscuit with a glass of water."

"My poor girl! We won't say anything more about chaperons. Come along with me to Ciro's this instant to lunch and tell me every-

He was completely won over now and looked very handsome with a slight flush on his brown face and his dark eyes bright with excitement.

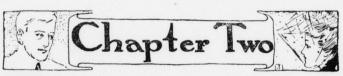

The girl lowered her long lashes, perhaps to hide tears.

When she did this and drooped the corners of her mouth she was very engaging, and the young man tingled all over with pity. That poor, pretty creature starving in her charming pink dress and hat of roses! How strange life was! It was something to be thankful for that he had met her.

A little while ago he had walked through the Galerie Charles Trois, thinking how delightful the tables looked at Ciro's and making up his mind to return there for lunch. But afterward on the terrace he had been so miserable that he would probably have forgotten all about his plan if it had not been for the girl.

Now he chose a small table in a corner of the balcony close to the glass screen. A month later he might have had to engage it long beforehand, but today, though the place was well filled with pretty women and their attendant men, there was not a crowd, and he could listen to his companion's low voiced confidences without fear of being overheard.

E ordered a lunch which he thought the girl would like, with wine to revive the faculties that he knew must be failing. Then, when she had eaten a little, daintily in spite of her hunger, he encouraged her to talk

"Mother and I are all alone in the world," she said. "We are Belgian and live in Brussels, but we have drifted about a good deal, just amusing ourselves. Somehow we never happened to come here until a month ago. Then my mother said one day in Paris: 'Let us go to Monte Carlo. I dreamed last night that I won 20,000 francs there.' My mother is rather superstitious. We came, and she did win at first. She was delighted and believed in her dream so much that when she began to lose she went up and up, doubling each time. They call the game she made 'playing the martingale.'

"She lost all the money we had with us and telegraphed home for more. Soon she had sold out every one of our securities. Then she won and went half mad with joy and excitement, but the joy didn't last long. She lost all again-literally our all. We were penniless. There was nothing left to pay the hotel bill. I went out and found a Mont de Piete, just beyond the limits of the principality. They aren't allowed inside. I pawned all our jewelry, and, as we had a great many valuable things, I got several thousand francs. I thought the money would last us until I could find something to do; but, without telling me what she meant to do, mother took it all to the Casino-and-it followed the rest.

"She was so horrified at what she had done, when it was too late, that she wished to kill herself. It was a terrible time for me, but I was so sorryso sorry for her."

As the girl said this she looked full into the young man's eves with her great, appealing ones. He thought that she must have a wonderfully sweet nature to have forgiven that horrible fat old woman after being subjected to so much undeserved suffering. It was a thousand pities, he said to himself, that a really good sort of girl should be forced to live her life beside a creature of that type and under such an influence. He had not quite believed in the poor child at first perhaps, and because he did believe in her now he felt poignant remorse for his past injustice.

"What did you do, then?" he asked, honestly absorbed in the story, for he was a generous and warm hearted fellow, who found most of his pleasure in these latter days in the help he could give others, to make them happier than he was himself.

"I comforted her as well as I could, but I did" know what would

"The Heart of Maryland."

The visit to this city of David Belasco's vividly realistic and romantic idyl of love and war, "The Heart of Maryland," will occur on Friday evening, Dec. 20, at Emporium Opera House. The story of 'The Heart of Maryland' is simply a life history, an epic which appeals to every human understanding and so wins its place in the popular heart. The locality where its events are supposed to occur vividly recall the traditions of our old colonial days and deftly blend the history of the past with the stirring realism of the present time. It is illuminated by the unfading radiance of a woman's love and undaunted heroism in behalf of the man she adores.

A Question of Class.

"They are constantly catching more grafters," said the hopeful citizen. "Not regular grafters," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Those who get caught are only amateurs."—Washington Star.
