Theatorium Anniversary.

The first anniversary of the Emporium Theatorium was held last Monday evening, June 22, 1908. The Theatorium was first opened in a store room on Broad street, now occupied by Mrs. M. F. Conway, but only remained there a short time as the crowds were too large for the room. Later it was removed to the Opera House, where, under the efficient management of Messrs. Bair, Blinzler and Green, the audiences were well pleased with every production. About Jan. 1, the Theatorium was again moved to the present site in the Shives building and after giving excellent satisfaction in the picture line, high class vaudeville was added. Last Monday evening was the crowning success as the pictures were of the finest and the vaudeville was conducted by Whaley and Whaley, musicians of the highest type. These gentlemen of the Theatorium Company deserve a great deal of praise and credit for their untiring efforts to please the people. The town can boast of one of the neatest places of the kind in this section of the state.

If there were any general strong desire for a general revision of the Tariff, men like Cannon, Payne and Dalzell would be beaten at the polls or made to crawl in the House. As it is, the Tariff reform sentiment may be described as scattering. --New York Sun.

Why Taft Won.

"The nomination of Mr. Taft by such an overwhelming vote came of several causes," says the Nashville, (Tenn.) American. "The first was his personal popularity, the second was the powerful and energetic influence of the administration in his behalf, and the third and most compelling influence was that when the whole field had been surveyed there was no other prominent Republican who so well filled all the requirements of the situation. None of the men whose names were placed before the Chicago convention compared with Mr. Taft in point of availability. None had his pleasing personality. Each of them, except Mr. Hughes, represented some extreme faction. None, except LaFollette stood for the Roosevelt policies and the Wisconsin senator's extreme radicalism, to say nothing of other considerations, made him impossible. Gov. Hughes was the only one of the opposing candidates who compared in point of strength and availability to the secretary of war, and the factional opposition incurred in his own state, though in a just cause, was a strong impediment. This was evidenced by the fact that ten New York votes were cast against him.

"The persistent iteration that President Roosevelt would in the end take the nomination for himself was founded on the strained belief that he was capable of treachery, or that Mr. Taft was suffering himself to be made a stalking horse to delude the public. Either was impossible.

"While Secretary Taft stands for the Roosevelt policies, he has not antagonized the conservative element in his party. While one in principle with the President, his methods are essentially different, his temperament is wholly opposite; nothing rash or precipitate is expected of Mr. Taft. It is difficult to associate him with the idea of anything very radical.

"In nominating Secretary Taft the Republican party has put its best foot forward. He is beyond question the strongest man the party could offer.

"There is one gratifying feature of the presidential campaign this year. The candidates of the two opposing parties, assuming Mr. Bryan's nomination by the Democrats, are men of unsullied personal reputation. Both are clean and upright, and the country's dignity and self-respect will be duly maintained with either in the presidential office.
