The Sting of a Bee. An eastern fable tells of a potentate who demanded that there should be brought to him the stings of a thousand bees killed because one of their colony had dared commit lese majesty by stinging the hand of royalty. When they were brought in a tiny golden thimble the king was so amazed to find that a thousand of the hypodermic points made such a little mass that he issued a manifesto to the ef-fect that thereafter no person within the bounds of the kingdom should complain at the sting of a bee. The lesson of the fable is that petty annoyances hurt because they are exag-gerated in the mind: that when they are seen in their actual proportions they are so slight as to merit only contempt. How much comfort would come to the majority of persons if they could but see the tiny size of the bee stings that lead them to acts of petulance, words of anger, expressions of reproach. The bee sting annoy-ances have caused lifelong breaches of friendship. They have broken up fam-liles and caused anger and resentment to take the place of love and fealty .-Baltimore American.

The Mississippi of Streets. A street is like a river, with its hu-man current carrying all manner of drift between its banks of residences or shops on either side. And if this simile be appropriate then New York's Broadway is the Mississippi of streets. Probably no other avenue in the world presents so many contrasts in the flot-sam and jetsam it carries from Harlem to the Battery. Every type of hu-manity-uprooted saplings from farms and orchards, proud hulled craft in sliks and sating-may be described in the surging mass. Banker and boot-black, the swaggering swell and the draggled derelict, walk shoulder to shoulder-rush, rather, for Broadway is a maelstrom, the embodiment of New York's bustle and hurry, the place where nothing can stand still. Richwhere norming can stand still. Hich-ard Harding Davis once said that everybody "seems to be trying to reach the bank to have a check cashed be-fore 8 o'clock." - George Selbei in Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Queer Cellateral.

"Here is a fact as strange as it is true," said an Egyptologist. "Mum-mies in ancient Egypt were used chiefly as collateral.

"When an Egyptian wanted to bor-row he gave his father's or grandfather's mummy as security. Some-times, if he required a large sum, he gave his father and both grandfathers, and he would even throw in the mum-my of his mother-in-law if she fortunately happened to be in a mummified state.

"Joking aside," the Egyptologist con-tinued. "what I tell you is the truth. An Egyptian was not permitted to without pledging the mummy of some near relative. It was deemed in Egypt both impious and infamous not to redeem so sacred a pledge as that, and he who died with a family mummy still in pawn was himself buried in unconsecrated ground."-Cin-cinnati Enquirer.
