A DAMAGED CURTIN.

For several months past the Johnstown Tribune has floated at its mast-head the names of Ulysses S. Grant for President and Galusha A. Grow for Vice President of the United States. The editor had, moreover, in his usual well rounded sentences and strictly grammatical flourishes given a reason for the "faith that was in him." This was enough-or should have previous instance, of a public meeting conbeen enough! A position thus deliberately taken by the Tribune should have and politicians, and anxious alone for the set the question at rest forever-and that organ awaited with the most characteristic complacency the ratification of its choice | declaring in advance of political conventions, by the Radical State Convention.

But alas for the Convention !- it met, and not having the fear of the Tribune before its eyes, recommended Andy Curtin, "the soldier's friend," for Vice President. Imagine the herror of him of the Tribine, in scanning the proceedings of the Gonvention, to find his predestined candidate thrown into the shade-Grow outgrown by Curtin!

But shall the Tribune submit to this insult ? No! to submit would be dastardly. The Tribune, on the contrary, treats the | Union, it would stimulate others, controlled Convention as Stevens wanted to treat the election of 1838, "as if it had never held the people in bondage, and, as business taken place," ignores the nominee for Vice men, and lovers of our country, neet to- as now disgraces the country. President, and launches out into the most unmeasured abuse of Andrew G. Curtin!

We almost wished for the trenchant quill of the defunct Alleghanian, and fancied how the editor of that paper would have impaled his Tribuneship, and given him no quarter. But, alas! there is no one to administer the rebuke-no hand to chastise! The Atleghanian is dead-and the Freeman an outsider !

We can only gaze upon the wreck of Curtin, as we find it dismantled by the spoliator and buccaneer of the Tribune. And should the Radical National Convention fail to nominate Curtin, we doubt not the Tribune will claim the distinguished honor of accomplishing his defeat-and "have his claim allowed." As it is, the Tribune goes unrebuked, save by an occasional "not lifted" or "returned" of its weekly issue. This is not, however, by any means the noblest revenge, and we entreat the patrons of that paper to forbear. For after all, viewing the Tribune's peccadillo from our stand-point, and knowing as we do its peculiarities, we think the offence entirely "venial," and not "mortal." And thus we reason it out.

The Tribune is a most respectable family paper, (as it admits itself,) but it is a little mite cranky and queer: and withal highly poetical. Now, it had conceived a vivid appreciation of the beautifully alliterative terms of Grant and Grow, as they fall F. Dodge, John Cochrane, John E. Williams, upon the drum of a finely attuned car. We admit that a plodding politician of the nineteenth century may fail to "see" this -but not so the Tribune, Its auric nerve would be keen'y alive to the sensation.

Besides, the Tribune is poetical, and no doubt the thoughtlessness of the Radical

F. J. and a melodeon, tion you would draw between yourselves, discoursing sweet music to this effect:

Oh! we'll elect our President, As well the rebels know; The Democrats cannot prevent Success to Grant and Grow!

We are universal suffrage men, As soon the world shall know : We'll carry Grant for President, Along with N-E-Grow!

Now this is all spoiled, and instead the doleful refrain must be taken up : Our prospects now are not so good-Before they were quite certain;

For Grant and Grow the negroes stood, But not for Grant and Curtin. And hence the Tribune's dissatisfaction.

ALTHOUGH the Rump Senate has been organized as a "High Court of Impeachment" for more than a week past, the trial of the President did not commence until Monday, and its almost entire session on that day was taken up with a feeble and wordy harangue from Beast Butler, in which he denied the judicial character of the "Conrt," and claimed that it was bound by no rule of law or precedent. He addressed Chief Justice Chase as "Mr. President," and members of the Court as "Senators," and in strong terms urged the conviction of the President.
