

Col. Benton and the Woolly Horse.

A Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial relates the following anecdote of the late Col. Benton: "Next door to Shillington's, on Pennsylvania avenue, a fellow came one day, about 1850, and opened a show. He had music playing at the door—a hurdy-gurdy, or something—and across the pavement stretched a gorgeous transparency to this effect: "THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN POINT, Captured by CAPT. JOHN C. BENTON, U. S. A., On Exhibition Here.

"It is neither horse nor stag, nor antelope, but a marvelous combination of them all; an extraordinary nondescript, the puzzle of the faculty, the miracle of nature, the admiration of the world!" "The day after this spectacle opened, Dr. Wallace, now of the New York Herald, a favorite of Benton's, was looking over the papers in Shillington's, when Col. Benton, in his pompous and stately way, turned the corner, coming down Four-and-a-half street. He heard the music of the hurdy-gurdy, and seeing the great painted canvass over the pavement, he folded his cloak around him and proceeded to read the inscription. As he did so his English nose began to expand; his whiskers brushed forward like gun-swags, began to curl; his gray eyes looked famine.

Wallace, inoffensively reading the papers, was suddenly disturbed by the Colonel laying violent hands upon him. "Here, sir! You! I want you, sir!" said he in his deepest and most dreadful tones. He put his talons into Wallace's shoulder, lifting him almost off his feet, shoved him ahead, and poked him along into the street and up the pavement. At the door of the show he took Wallace by the nape of the coat collar and gave him a chuck up stairs.

"Stop!" said the showman, "you have not paid your admission!" "How much, sir, is it?" said Benton, terribly; "what is your fare, sir?" "Quarter of a dollar!"

Benton produced the quarter and handed it over graciously. Then he clucked Wallace further up stairs. "Go on, sir; I want you, for a witness!" "Stop!" said the showman below to Benton, who had pushed by him. "I must have your fare, too."

"I don't recognize you, sir," cried Benton; "go on!" to Wallace.

Wallace, in great consternation to know what this meant, was propelled into the show-room, while the door-keeper followed hard after to recover his money.

There stood the woolly horse, eccentric, indeed, at his ruminations, divided from the people by a rope. Across this rope the Colonel vaulted. He fixed his talons in the nondescript's wool, with another grip upon his cropper, and, at a jerk, tore away hide, horns, and the whole outtrigery of the quadruped.

"There," said the Colonel, in a scream, standing upon this hide like an eagle upon a steep, "You are an impostor, sir! You slander, in this imposition, an officer of the army. I give you twenty-four hours to leave this city. Depart!"

He slung Wallace aside, paying no more attention to him, and stalked up toward the capital.

Shillington says that in ten minutes there wasn't a vestige of the showman left—Dray-horse, hurdy-gurdy, and canvass folded their wings like the Arabs, and silently passed away.

AN EXCITING SCENE. The Troy (New York) Times says:—We learn from an engineer on the Hudson River Railroad the particulars of one of the most exciting scenes that probably ever occurred on the lines of that road.—On Saturday last the locomotive Arctic was standing on the track at Poughkeepsie, awaiting the arrival of the 9:45 A. M. train from this city, which it was to conduct to New York.

The fireman of the engine was a recent employee of the road, and jumping off the locomotive, repaired to a neighboring saloon, where he became not drunk, but utterly wild and ungovernable with liquor.

The time for the arrival of the train was fast approaching, and the engineer becoming alarmed at the absence of his fireman, got off the engine to look for him. During his absence the fireman returned, and, influenced by the devil, mounted the engine, and with one clutch, opened the throttle which was to set the ponderous machinery in motion.

Away the Arctic sped with the speed of the wind. For a few minutes all was conservation and excitement among the lookers on. In a moment the engine with its maniac driver was out of sight, bounding along the track at a rate utterly fearful to contemplate, and suggesting most terrible disaster to such unlucky trains as might be proceeding in the track.

What to do—how to stop the mad career of the engine—were the questions which presented themselves for solution to the minds of the railroad officials at Poughkeepsie. There was but one resource, and that was to telegraph to the station master at New Hamburg to throw open the switch at that point and run the flying locomotive off the track.

But before the agent at that place could execute the order, the Arctic came tearing along at its greatest speed, pressed the station in safety, and was flying on its course like a demon of destruction. Orders were sent ahead for the track to be torn up, as it was determined that if possible no one should be harmed by the franks of the madman but himself, neither his horse nor the value of the engine being considered of the least account when the lives of so many others were depending on the result.

Fortunately the engine was stopped by causes within itself, rather than by any of the measures suggested for its overthrow and destruction. The engineer at Poughkeepsie, when he left the engine to look for his absent fireman, had both pumps at work filling the boiler with water.—The fire—either did not know how to shut off the flow of cold water, or had overlooked in his frenzy and excitement the fact that the pumps were at work, and after running about a dozen miles the pressure of water upon the boiler was so great as to cause an overflow, and fire went down, steam was exhausted, and the engine stopped for want of the necessary driving power.
