MOZART'S OXEN WALTZ.

The sensitive nature of Mozart, that sweet est of all musical composers, is well known. The slightest discord produced in him severe britation, and when engaged in musical composition his feelings grew so intense that he almost lost consciousness of all going on around him. One day he was engaged in arranging one of the most beautiful airs in an opera ne was composing, when the butcher called for his pay, which had long been 1869: "THE AGE." 1869. due. In vain his wife endeavored to attract the attention of the rapt artist, who scribbled away, utterly unconcious of her presence. She ran down stairs with tears in her eyes, telling the butcher that her husband could not be spoken to, and that he must come another time. But the man of blood was not easily to be daunted; he must have his bill settled, and speak with Improvements in Every Department, Mozart himself or he would not send him another ounce of meat. He ascended the steirs. Mozart, distantly concious that omething had passed in his presence, had continued pouring the effusions of his fautasia on paper when the heavy foot steps resonnded in the hall. His stick was at land. Without turning his eyes from the sheet, held his stick against the door to keep out the intru er.

more anxious hurried as fast as he could when a wrap at the door demanded permission to enter. The beautiful effasion was in danger of being lost. The affrighted composer cast a fugitive glance at his stick; it was too short. With anxiety bordering on frenzy, he looked around his room, and a pole standing behind the curtain caught his eye; this he seized, holding it with all his might white. The knob was turned, but the pole withstood the first effort. A pause succeded. Words were heard on the staircass, and the intruder renewed his efforts the second somed to increase with his anxiety. Large drops of perspiration stood on his forehead. Stemming the pole against his left breast the visitor. He succeeded but for a moment, yet it was a precious moment; the delight-· ful air was poured upon the paper; it was Bayed !

"Mr. Mozart-"said the butcher. "Halt! halt!" said the composer, seizing the manuscript, and hurrying toward the piane-forte. Down he sat, and the most de chtfol air that was ever heard responded from the instrument. The eyes of his wife, and even of the butcher, began to moisten. Mozart finished the tune, rose again, and, running to the writing-desk, he filled out what was wanting.

"Well, Mr. Mozart," said the butcher, somewhat recovered from his musical trance. "Well' then, you know it now, and you also know that you owe me money for meat."

"I do," said Mozart, with a sigh. "Never mind," said the man, under heart; "you make me a waltz for my marlet you have meat for a year to come."

"It is a bargain!" cried the lively and gifted Mozart; and down he sat, and a waltz was elicited from the instrument-such a waltz as the butcher had never before

"Meat for a year, did I say?" exclaimed the enraptured butcher. "No: one hundred ducats you shall have for the waltz, club-additional copies at the same price. but I want it with trumpets and horns and fid lies-you know best-and soon too!" "You shall have it so," said Mozart, who could scarcely trust his ears, "and in ar hour you may send for it." The liberal-minded butcher retired. In an hour the waltz was set in full orchestra music. The butcher returned, was delighted with the music, and paid Mozart his one person hundred ducats, - a sum more splendid than he had ever received from the Emperor for the greatest of his operas. It is to this incident that the lovers of harmony are indebted for one of the most charming trifles, the celebrated "Oxen Waltz,"-a piece of music still unrivaled.

Mark Twain Victimized.

It is sel tom pleasant to tell on one's self. but sometimes it is a sort of relief to a man to make a sad confession. I wish to unburden my mend now, and yet I almost believe that I am moved to do it more because I be suse I desire to pour balta upon my wounded heart. (I don't know what balm is, never having seen any, but I believe it is the correct expression to use in this connection.) You may remember that I lectured in Newark lately for the young gentlemen of the Clayonian Society. I did, at any rate. During the afternoon of that day I was talkreferred to, and he said he had an uncle who, from some cause or other, seemed to have grown permanently bereft of all emotion .-And, with tears in his syes, this young man

"Oh, if I could only see him laugh once more! Oh, if I could only see him weep!" I was touched. I never could withstand distress. I said:

I was profoundedly moved. I said: "My son, bring the old party around. I have got some jokes in that lecture that will make him laugh if there is any laugh in him-and if they miss fire I have some

Than the young man blessed me, and wept on my neck, and blew his nose on my coat tail, and went after his uncle. He placed him in full view, in the second row of benches that night, and I began on him. I tried him with mild jokes; then with severe ones; I desed him with bad jokes, and riddled him with good ones; I fired old jokes into him, and peppered him fore and aft with red-hot new ones; I warmed up to my mork, and assaulted him right and left, in front and behind; I fumed and sweated, and charged and routed, till I was hourse and sick, and frantic and furious-but I never moved him once-I never started a smile or a tear! Never a ghost of a smile and never a suspicion of moister! I was actounded. I closed the lecture at last with one despairing shrick-with one wild burst of humor-and burled a joke of superpatpeni strocky full at him. It never phased Wardrobes, and all home comforts. him! Then I sat down bewildered aud ex-
