Peculiarity of Handwriting.

It is a remarkable fact, no man can ever get rid of the style of handwriting peculiar to his country. If he he English, be always writes in English style ; if F each, in French style ; if Garman, Italion or Spanish, in the style peculiar to his nation. "I am acquainted," says a correspondent, "with a Eccnehman who speaks English like one of our own countrymen, and writes it with ten times the correctness of ninety-nine in a hundred of us, but yet he cannot, for the life of him, imitate our modes of writing. I knew a Scotch youth who was educated entirely in France, and resided eighteen years in that country, mixing exclusively with French people, but who, although he had a French writing master and probably never saw enything but Freuch writing in his life, yet wrote exactly in the English style ; it was really national instinct. In Paris all the writingmesters profess to teach the English style of writing; but with all their professions and all their exertions, they can never get their pupils, to adopt any but the cramped hand of the French. Some pretend to be able to tell the characteristics of individuals from their handwritings. I know not how this may be, but certainly the nation to which an individual belongs can be instantly determined by his handwriting. The difference between the American or English and the French handwriting is immense -a schoolboy would distinguish it at a glance. Mix together a hundred sheets of manuscript written by a hundred Frenchm n, and another hundred written by Englishmen or Americans, and no one could fail to distinguish every one of them, though all should be written in the same language, and with the same pens and paper. The difference between Italian, Spanish and German is equally decided. In fact, there is about as great a difference in the hand writings of different nations -s in their languages. And it is a singular truth that, though a man may shake off national babits, accents, manner of thinking, style of dress-though he may become perfectly identified with another nation, and speak its language as well, perhaps better than his own-yet never can be foreign style."- Eclose from the Club.

CUI IOUS WILLS -One of our correspondents, who has a taste for such matters, has collected and sent us for publication in the Ledger, the following carious wills. The first is from the will of Geo. Applebee, Rector of St. Bride's, London,
