AN OLD BALLAD.

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1450. I have a young sister Far beyond the sea ; Many are the presents That she has sent to me. She has sent me a cherry Without any stone She has sent me a pigeon Without any bone ; Without any thorns She sent me a briar; She bade me love my lover, And that without desire. How can a cherry Be without a stone ? How can a pigeon Be without a bone 7 How can a briar Be without a thorn 7 And whoe're loved without desire

Since true love first was born 7

When the cherry was a blossom Then it had no stone : When the dove was in the egg Then it had no bone ; Whe the briar sprouted Never a thorn it bore And when a maiden has her lover Oh, then she longe no more.

kinds of secret murder, yet an assassin by pre-eminence, is something more than a murderer. Indeed, it is not so much the act, nor the manner of it, whether secret or open, for most assassing are hold to recklessness, but the motive which determines the nature of the act. The motive of the assassin rarely, if ever, a purely personal, selfish or private one; but the word has assumed a political meaning, and the historical assassins acts in obedience to some higher law, of which he persuaded himself by his own peculiar and fallacious reasoning that he is the executor. Some motive of public, political, national, patriotic or religious necessity prompts him.

The reasoning that brings the will to such a remedy for any evil or oppression, whether public or private, no matter how many, in necessarily fallacious, and betokens a diseased imagination (in the person that even contemplates it,) whether the object is to cut down one's country or avenge a private wreng-they all belong to the class denominated monomaniacs.

The assassination of Cresar by Brutus, of Henry the Fourth by the fanatic Ravaillac, of Duncan by Macbeth, more celebrated by the poet than by history, of Marat by Charlotte Corday, the terrile attempt on Napoleon the Great by Staps, and the last equally as horrible and defenseless as any of the others, of Lincoln by J. Wilkes Booth, are among the most celebrated in history, and are removed by the motives, not at all by manner, from those vulgar murders prompted by such private and selfish motives as revenge, jealonsly or gain.

Brutus, instigated by a misconceived patrictism, holding, at the time, the office of city prator, thus recegnizing the govern-ment of his patron by acting noder.it, killed Cas ar at the capital, in the Senate Cham-ber in the light of day and the very eye of the public. He failed even by dint of his political power and the most artful eloquence to make the Roman people approve of this ungrateful act withdrew into Macedonia, and, although opposing the triumvirs with a mighty force, met the avenging spirit of the murdered Cæsar at Phillippi, and in the agony of remorse, miscrably cast himself upon his sword and put an end to his 6935731

François Ravailiac, first a lawyor's clerk, then a schoolmaster, and afterwards a member of the order of the Feuillants, but expelled from it as a fanatic, afterwards returned to his nativo village of Angolem. where his gloomy fanaticism engendered in him the most intense hatred of Protestantism, and especially of his sovereign, Hepry IV., an adherent of the new faith, and one of the most enlightened monarchs who ever set upon a throne, whom, however, he had been taught to believe the enemy of the Catholic faith, and whom he went to Paris to kill. Clad in the loog gown of his order and armed with a long knife, Ravaillac met the King as he was riding from his palace to visit the sick Sully, and in the public street of La Ferronnerie, in the midst of a crowd, plupged the dagger into the heart of his victim. He fied, but was immediately caught, acknowledged the deed, and, after a trial in Paris, was torn to pieces by horses.

Macbeth, after inviting Duncan, King of Scotland, to partake of his hospitality. (at Fair terms and Indisputable title. least, such is the legendary account upon given 1st April. which the tragedy of Shakspeare is founded, Feb. 4, 1863.and, although differing from the obscure scrap of history which makes Macbeth kill Duncan in buttle, near Elgin, is the account to which the minds of readers must naturally revert.) murdered the old King in his castle, thus committing a double crime against the laws of hospitality and nature.
