"My soul !" he cried, after he had run his fingers over the instrument awhile, "that is the best violin I ever saw! There is not a better one in the city-a perfectly genuine old Cremona ! I will give youga hundred dollars for it."

Hardman said it was not his.

"I'll give you a hundred and fifty ! Two hundred ! '

Mr. Hardman was forced to explain how the violin came to be left in the store. The stranger had taken out his pocketbook, and drawn forth two one hundred dollar bank notes. He put them back, remarking :

"I must have that violin if money will buy it. When the owner returns will you ask him to wait for me ? If he cannot wait, ask him to meet me here at six o'clock. If he cannot do that, tell him to call at the office of the Treasurer of the Academy of Music, and inquire for the Director of the Orchestra. Will you do it ?"

Hardman said he would.

"But," suggested the stranger, "you need not tell the man what I said about his viol, nor what I've offered ; because he may have no idea of what a treasure he possesses. You will be careful and circumspect."

The stranger went away, and Ralph Hardman reflected. In the course of an hour the owner of the violin returned, and asked for his box. But the shoddy man had been captivated by the golden bait.

What would the gentleman sell his viclin for ?

At first the gentleman would not listen to the proposition ; but after a deal of talk he confessed that he was not himself a professor, and could not well afford to keep such a valuable instrument. He would sell it for $175, not a penny less.

Ralph Hardman paid the money and became the legal possessor of the violin, ready to take anywhere from three to five hundred dollars from the director of the orchestra, as he might be able.

But the director did not come. At the end of a week Hardman carried the violin to a professional friend, and asked him what was its real value. His friend examined it, and said :

"Two dollars and a half, without the box."

Ralph Hardman was strongly of the opinion that the gentleman who left the violin in his care was a swindler, and that the director was a partner in the business, and that, together, they had made him their victim. That night shoddy was marked up ten per cent.

"SEEING THE ELEPHANT."-A couple of lads in Portage City, Wis., climbed a tree outside the tent to get a "deadhead" view of Forepaugh's circus. As soon as the elephant was through in the ring, the managers brought him out and hitched him to the identical tree from the limbs of which the lads were visual to limbs of the limbs of the lads were visual to limbs of the last to linbs of the last to li which the lads were viewing the circus. To "a boy up a tree," this looked a little out of order ; but they kept as quiet as death, fearing that they would either lose the closing performance, or be the subjects of the displeasure of the circus man, if he should discover them "dead heading" it to his show. In due time the performance closed, the crowd dispersed, and horror upon horrors, the keeper of the animals now added to the perils of their situation by hitching two smaller elephants and a catnel to the same tree .---Our lads now discovered that they were in for a night of it, as all hands had left, excepting only themselves and the animals on guard below. All hope of escape was now cut off. About this time Romeo concluded to investigate matters about him, and with his trunk commenced trimming out the smaller branches. Our boys commenced climbing also, un il they got above his reach ; and now the camel took up the investigation, and poking his ugly mug up among the limbs, he drove the boys to the very uppermost branches of the tree, where they were discovered, at daybreak, by their anxious parents, who had been searching for them in vain all night, teetering and tossed about like blackbirds on the top of a rice stalk on a windy day. The boys saw more of these animals than all the rest of the boys in town, and "for nothin'," too; and if they don't remember the time for the balance of their natural days when they "sat up" with Romeo, then we miss our guess .-The phrase "seeing the elephant," had to
