

LETTER FROM EUROPE.

The English People - Their Ignorance about America - Americans in Paris - Paris Cafes - Restaurants - Park, Boats and Buckle Cakes, &c., &c.

PARIS, August 12, 1869. DEAR FREEMAN - My last letter was written from London, where it was my intention to remain for a longer time, but Americans who come to this side of the Atlantic generally find the city in which this letter is being written much more to their taste than London, and I find I am not an exception to the general rule; whether the cause is a circumstance to be set down against me or to be stated in my favor, I must confess I do not know. London is a gloomy, smoky place, where the men all dress the same way, eat the same way, and seemingly think the same way. They have in England their own way of doing things, which, for want of better knowledge, they conclude is the only way, and the person who does otherwise is at once set down as a know-nothing. English are strong prejudicial about their own country, will hardly admit that there is any other, and in regard to America evince an amount of ignorance that one who has never visited England will hardly credit, and beyond the fact that there is a city called New York, and another called Boston, seem to know nothing about America, and do not care to know more. If the enthusiastic American who returns to his native country, what he states is taken with a very great amount of allowance; in many cases strong doubts are expressed as to the truthfulness of the assertion. I have been asked if Pennsylvania is in New York, and if there was good Buffalo shooting in the neighborhood of Pittsburgh, and only a few days ago a gentleman asked me if living expenses were not quite small in New York, and if he was not able to shoot. State the case to them as it is, and as I said before, your statement is apt to be doubted. There are, of course, Englishmen who have visited the United States and can comprehend the vastness of our country, and are willing to admit that its inhabitants are energetic, enterprising and industrious, but they are few. For Englishmen travel very little, at least from home, and for one Englishman who goes to America, there are forty Americans who cross to this side of the Atlantic, so that information about America is not apt to be disseminated very rapidly by that method. You can find a great number of full grown Americans who have never visited Paris, only a few hours ride from London, notwithstanding the many attractions of the beautiful city, but I venture to say that, if he was as close to New York as it is to London, it would be hard to find an American boy of twenty years of age who had not visited it. What I have written may seem to stay at home Americans strong assertions, but, though as much had been told me before I visited England, I came abroad with the best feelings in the world towards England and the English, and though upon my first visit to the country I noticed that thing, I refrained from mentioning it, but this prejudice and ignorance are common under my observation, that I cannot help but make a note of it. Meeting this on all sides, it is not surprising that Americans are eager to cross the channel to France, where from the difference in language little is to be expected, but where there is evidently more general information about America than in England; where the people are polite, and where the social freedom of the city and many attractions of the place itself, Americans find delight, so much so, that in the neighborhood of the Grand Hotel you hear the English language spoken almost as much as you hear French. Amusements of all kinds are numerous, fetes and gala days follow in constant succession almost; the climate is charming all the year, and the time when you are all situated in the best at home, it being cool and pleasant here, and good living is cheap. Americans appreciate all these things, and though the language spoken of may be superficial, it is not detracted from the pleasure it imparts. I commenced writing it was not my intention to have written as much about the difference between the two countries, but as it is nothing, I wish to lay it back, and therefore I offer it as a sort of introduction to this epistle. I don't like "guide book" letters, and consequently don't propose to describe the public buildings of this city, but note for your readers some observations of some of the peculiar features of Parisian life, among the most remarkable of which are up to about seven francs, (about one dollar and forty cents in gold,) which at the latter almost any amount of money can be eaten up, a great deal depending upon the appetite of the diner and his capacity. The sixteen sous restaurant is mostly patronized by the workmen, students, shop girls, etc., are generally clean and neat, the waiters attentive and civil, and furnish to those desiring it dinners as high as one franc and a quarter. The sixteen sous dinner consists of a plate of soup, a plate of meat, a dish of vegetables, a dessert, a small bottle of wine and bread as desired, quite enough to satisfy even a hungry man, though the portions are some times small. For five sous an additional bottle of wine, double the size of the one given with the sixteen sous meal, is furnished, or if teutonic in your tastes, you can have beef instead. For a franc and a quarter, (twenty five sous,) you are allowed a plate of soup, three dishes from the bill of fare at choice, for instance, fish, roast meat and entree, a dessert, and a small bottle of wine with bread as before. The bill of fare presents considerable variety to select from, and persons who are not too fastidious, or those who do not stop to consider that in the economical management necessary in such an establishment, such scraps as are left on the plates of those who find their portions too large, may become the component parts of some appetizing dish on the bill of fare of the day following, so disguised that the very person who left it the day before would fail to recognize it. The next class of restaurants are those where dinner is served for two francs and for two francs and a half, the difference in price owing to the quality of wine furnished, and among this class some very excellent places are to be found, especially in the Palais Royal. They are generally on the second floor, are neat and tidy, serve the dinner well, furnish napkins, etc. Dinner at these places consists of soup, your choice of three dishes from the bill of fare, comprising fish, entrees, roasts, vegetables and entremets, a dessert and a small bottle of wine. The portions are larger than the cheaper establishments furnish, and a hearty appetite can easily be satisfied. Other restaurants, on the same principle, charge more, according to their reputation for cuisine and the furnishing of the establishment, but any reasonable person can be satisfied at the two franc and a half restaurants. Parties who would be acquainted in this city, have no trouble in living for less than they could under similar circumstances at home, and let those of your readers, who contemplate coming here "cut this out and paste it in their hats," and save vexation that I had to go through, from not being able to read upon the bill of fare how many dishes I was entitled to, sometimes not getting all and sometimes having to pay considerable for extra dishes ordered, but which I was not entitled to. Those anxious for home fare will find on one of the principal streets a restaurant, where buckwheat cakes are served every morning, where pumpkin pies are baked fresh every day, and baked pork and beans ready, three times a week, in fact so many American visit here that their tastes are catered to, in many places, and American food drinks and American Soda Water, have become established institutions.

RESTAURANTS.

And as Americans coming to Paris find "something to eat," one of the essential things of life, here as well as anywhere else, I shall endeavor to give them such information as I have gained by some little experience. The French generally take, immediately on arising in the morning, a cup of coffee with a roll and butter; at eleven partake of a substantial breakfast, and about five or six in the evening enjoy a good dinner. One of the great advantages arising to the visitor in Paris, from the number and variety of these restaurants, is that almost any one can be satisfied and almost any taste satisfied. You are independent also, and no one makes it his or her business to make any comment if you see fit to dine at a cost of sixteen sous, in one of the cheap restaurants, or going to the celebrated Trois Freres Provencaux, to partake of a thirty franc meal. Though the cafe will supply the first meal or lunch, it is the restaurant that furnishes the others, and they are found in all quarters of the city, being numbered by thousands. They may be divided into two classes, those where a fixed price is charged and those where you dine a la carte, that is, paying a certain price for each article ordered. The former range in price from sixteen sous, (about sixteen cents gold),

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, AND HOOFLAND'S GERMAN TONIC. Prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia. Their introduction into this country from Germany occurred in 1825. THEY CURED YOUR FATHERS AND MOTHERS, LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, Nervous Debility, JAUNDICE, Disorders of the Kidneys, ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN, and all Diseases arising from a Disordered Liver, Stomach, or IMPURITY OF THE BLOOD.

Hoofland's German Bitters is entirely vegetable, and contains no liquor. It is a compound of Fluid Extracts of the Blood, Nausea, and Bile, from which these extracts are made are gathered from the most virtuous plants in Germany.

DEBILITY, There is no medicine equal to Hoofland's German Bitters or Tonic in curing Debility. It restores the system, strengthens the appetite, causes an enlargement of the food, and enables the body to digest it, purify the blood, give a good sound, healthy complexion, regulate the pulse, and, in fact, impart a bloom to the cheeks, and change the patient from a short-breathed, emaciated, weak, and nervous invalid, to a full-blooded, strong, and vigorous man.

Blood Purifiers, ever known, and will cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. Keep your system pure; keep your liver in order; keep your digestive organs in health; and you will never be afflicted with any disease which is not a direct result of impure blood. These Remedies are the best.

FROM HON. GEO. W. WOODWARD, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia, March 16, 1867. I find Hoofland's German Bitters is not an unwelcome remedy, but a good tonic, useful in cases of debility and want of nervous action, in the system.

FROM HON. JAMES THOMPSON, Judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia, April 28, 1868. I consider Hoofland's German Bitters a valuable medicine in case of attacks of indigestion, biliousness, dyspepsia, and all other ailments of the stomach and bowels.

FROM REV. JOSEPH H. KENNARD, D. D., Pastor of the Tenth Baptist Church, Philadelphia. Dr. JACKSON-DRAK SIX - I have been frequently requested to connect my name with recommendations of different kinds of medicines, but regarding the practice as out of my appropriate sphere, I have in all cases declined; but with a clear proof of various instances, and particularly in my own family, of the usefulness of Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, I depart from my usual course, to express my full conviction that for general debility of the system and especially for Liver Complaint, it is a most valuable and reliable preparation. I do not say it will cure those who suffer from the above causes. Yours, very respectfully, J. H. KENNARD.

CAUTION. Hoofland's German Remedies are counterfeited. The genuine have the signature of Dr. C. M. Jackson on the front of the outside wrapper of each bottle, and the name of the article blown in each bottle. All others are counterfeit. Price of the Bitters, $1.00 per bottle; of the Tonic, $1.50 per bottle; or a half dozen for $7.50. The tonic is put up in quart bottles. Recollect that it is Dr. Hoofland's German Remedies that are a universal standard and a highly merited success; and do not allow the Druggists to induce you to take any other, because he makes a large profit. Hoofland's German Remedies are sold by express, in any locality upon application to the PRINCIPAL OFFICE, AT THE GERMAN MEDICINE STORE, No. 61 ARCH STREET, Philadelphia. CHAS. M. EVANS, Proprietor, Formerly C. M. JACKSON & CO. These Remedies are for sale by Druggists, Storekeepers, and Medicine Dealers everywhere. Do not forget to examine well the article you buy, in order to get the genuine. For Sale by R. J. LLOYD, Druggist Ebsenburg, Pa. [Oct. 22-ly.]
