POPULAR SIMILES.

A CURIOUS HISTORY.

After the recent terrible burning of the Stonewall on the Mississippi river, a trunk | Lamp Burners, Wick and Chimneys of female clothing was rescued from the floating debris. In it was found a photograph of a "lady with dark brown hair done up in braids and harging low on the neck; a collar, white and narrow, with breastpin, right hand resting on table and riding glove on, ear-rings ; forchead high and features regular." The St. Louis Democrat, noticed this description, asks, "Could it have been the late lamented Mrs. Fitch, of No. 1,546 Broadway ?" The Louisville Courier Journal, catching at this curious incidental question, affirmed that the lost original of the picture had been known in Louisville at one time as "Mrs. Fitch," and then related the strange eventful story of her lite -The daughter of a wealthy and honored citizen of Louisvile, she erjoyed a girlhood of all the luxury and happiness that a parental idolatry of more than ordinary extravagance could procure, and in her fairest bloom was married to a gentleman in all ways calculated to continue to her the richest blessing of life. Her father had heartily sanctioned the marriage and given her his benediction in it; but so infatuated was he in idolatry of his child that the latter had scarcely lived with her husband a month before a perverted parental influence was almost frenziedly exerted to persuade her back to her home again. The insanely selfish sire alleged no other reaobliged to give her up. The girl returned to her foolish father, and, in taking this first misguided step, seemed to lose all her finer delicacy of nature. To make final her separation from her injured husband, she went secretly to Washington and sought a divorce; but, after a delay of six months, was righteously refused Then she repeated the wicked attempt in Indiana, and the facile laws of that State granted her petition. It is supposed that her father abetted her in this unwomanly act. If so, he paid a bitter penalty for his crowning folly. Returning again to her luxurious home, the divorced woman at once plunged head long into every fashionable dissipation, and soon made a reckless runaway match with a worthless become an actress This logical result of his own mad folly broke her father's heart, and he died. The new actress was hissed from the stage, but suffered the worst consequences of the polluting associations of the playhouse, and after a brief season was divorced from her second husband, Facilis decensus During the rebellion, a Major Fitch, of a Michigan regiment, was appointed Provost Marshal at Louisville. and, falling under the wiles of the degraded but still beautiful actress, fell from the heroic honors of an enviable manhood to the most painful ignominy of honor foresworn. His poor wife in Michigan, after a long period of neglect and suspense, repaired with her child to Louisville, and there had a miserable proof of her faithless husband's shame. Unwilling to give him up, she forgot her own wrongs, and actually kneeling to the heartless destroyer of her peace and home, humbly begged her to relinquish her last victum, for his old father's and his little child's sake. The answer of the ex-actress was a peremptory order to leave the house, and she went forth broken-hearted. Major Fitch, in the secure snare of the syren, went straight to the dogs. Becoming a common drunkard, he was dismissed from the army in disgrace, and, after earning a wretched livelihood for a time as driver of a street car, finally disappeared-no oue knew Virginia Street, near Caroline Street, whither. She, who had worked this ruin, then went to St. Lonis, and there entered upon the still deeper damnation of deluding others of her own sex in the pathway of the lost. When the ill-fated steamer Stonewall started from St. Louis for New Orleans, she and a fitting companion were among the doomed passen gers, and were undoubtedly among those who perished in that terrible disaster. A STORY is told of a late storm, which runs as follows : An old gent, with his aged wife, tried to escape from the flood which surrounded his house and stable by wading, but his wife's strength and resolution were not equal to the task, so he helped her up into a tree and made his that he is prepared to furnish all kind of TIN way alone to a knoll a short distance COPPER and SHEET IRON WARE of his away.
