SINCULAR FREAK OF A RED BIRD .- Mrs. Nedham, who recently died at Salem, Ind., had a five red bird and a cage of canaries.-----The red bird refusing to sing, she placed it in the cage with the canaries. Between the birds the most affectionate friendship grew up. When the nestling season of the canaries would arrive, the red bird would suffer them to pull out his feathers to make their nests from, and on such occasions he was almost entirely stripped of his plumage When taken from the canaries the red bird refused to sing, and not a note could be gotten from him until he was placed among the Canaries.

When Mrs. Nedham was upon her death bed she ordered the red bird to be brought lent combination, and, with his advice, after an to her. She took it into her hands and caexamination of the article, and consulting again ressed it tenderly. She then had a window with the druggist, I concluded to try it. I comopened near her bed and placed the bird menced its use about eight months ago, at which in it, saying, "Farewell, my beautiful pet," The bird sat upon the window for a few min-uets, and mounting into a shrub near by he bottle I was astonished and gratified at the beneficial effect, and after using it three weeks, was poured forth his richest song for about a able to walk out.
