THE MAN THAT WAS MARRIED. Not a sigh was heard nor a funeral note. And the man to the bride was hurried; Not a woman discharged her farewell groan On the spot where the tellow was married. No useless watch-chain covered his vest, Nor over dressed we found him, But he looked like a gentleman wearing his

With none of his friends around him Few and short were the things we said, And we spoke not a word of sorrow, But we silently gazed on the man that was wed And we bitterly thought on the morrow. We thought, as we silently stood about, With spite and anger eyeing, How the meanest stranger had cut us out With only half his trying. Lightly we'll talk of the fellow that's gone, And oft for the past upbraid him,

But little tell which, if we let him live on In the house where his wife conveyed him. But our heavy task at length was done, When the clock struck the hour for retiring, And we heard the spiteful squib and pun The girls were sullenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we turned to go; We had struggled and we were human; We shed not a tear, we spoke not our woe, But we left him alone with his woman.

Tales, Shetches, Inecdotes, &c. ABSENCE OF MIND.

Macauley remarks that absent mindedness is the mark of either a genius or a fool. We think that Lord Macauley was a little too severe on one of its sides A man's mind may be so intensely occopied with lofty intuitions and inspirations that his senses, seemingly, are scarcely awake to the realities of this tangible world.

A certain Scottish professor was not more remarkable for his writing on political economy than for his frequent unconsciousness of what passed before him that his wife once wagered that she would accost him in the street, inquire after the bealth of herself and family, and that he would not recognize her. She actually won the wager. The professor was once taking a solitary walk on the banks of a canal, into which in his abstraction he walked. When within a yard of the centre, an honest woman washing clothes behind him bawled out, "Come oot, come oot, fule body, or ye'll be droon't." The warning sounds invading the tympanum of his professional ear, had the effect of making him turn right about, and forthwith recover the dry land. The good woman, concluding him to be an idiot, sympathetically exclaimed : " Pair body, they mae muckle to answer for that lets ye gang yer lane." A friend tells the following amusing instance of absence of mind: My grandfather was returning home one evening from the hay field, driving his oxen before a load of hay. He had tied an old mare, which he had been using, to the cart behind, but happening to think of one of her favorite tricks of pulling, he untied ber again, and mounting, rode astride, still driving the oxen. He fell into a deep revery, as was his wont, in which balky mares and all other vexations sublunary matters were banished from his mind. But this serene state was suddenly broken up by his happening to think, when near home, that he had, when starting from the field, tied that unruly beast to the cart behind. Entirely forgetting the precaution he had afterwards taken, he whirled about only to discover that she was missing from the place: and, supposing that she had culled loose, he rode back at full gallop in search of the vixen. In the course of half a mile he met one of his neighbors, a stuttering fellow, to whom he called out to know if he had seen anything of her. Before the man had half surmounted his t-ts (perhaps from a comical expression on his face,) the whole truth flashed into my grandfather's mind, and he turned back at full speed, without waiting for a reply to his inquiry, only exclaiming, "Let her go; I'll no look her up." But it was too late for him to save himself, and his neighbors in the old Vermont village never suffered the story to be forgotten as long as he lived

We knew of a young fellow employed in a store on River street, who was one day sept into the cellar to draw a gallon of sperm oil. While waiting, he picked up a piece of chalk, and in a minute he was absorbed in sketching the proprietor's profile. The profile on the hogswas absorbed in his pursuit, the oil pursued its way over the cellar floor. He York artist.

shirts, one on top of another, and it was no wonder that his waistcoat would not button. On another occasion he and his wife were under invitation to dine at the mansion of the laird of the parish. The minister had been out for a long day's work, and when he came home, a little too late, he found his mistress already dressed and waiting. He at once went up stairs to make his toilet with strict injunctions from his good lady to be quick. He was so slow, however, that she got impatient, and went to see what was the cause of the delay. Entering the bed room she found the worthy man placidly enjoying his first sleep. Having undressed, it seems that in his absence of mind he had taken it for granted that the natural sequel was to go to bed, and he lay totally oblivious of the dinner party at the laird's.

It is said of Sir Isaac Newton that he often forgot to eat his dinner, which his housekeeper was accustomed to leave in a closet near his study door. His head was too much in the Heavens to mind the earth; so a friend knowing his peculiarity, one day slipped his dinner out of the basket and ate it. When at last the philosopher came out and greeted his friend, he asked to be excused till he took his lunch. On looking into his basket and finding it gone, he simply exclaimed, much to his friend's amusement, "Oh, I forgot I had eaten my dinner,"

An absent-minded man, Mr. A of Troy, receives a letter; knows the handwriting-he wants to read it in haste-it is already dark-he strikes a light, tears a paper and lights a lamp, but the letter is gone-he has used it to light the lamp.

There is a late striking instance given of Pere Gratry, who had just been nominated Director of the Academy of Paris. One day, when going to the Sorbonne. where he lectured on theology, he imagined he had forgotten his watch, and took it out of his pocket to see if he had time to go and fetch it.

It is said of Neander, the learned lecturer, and ecclesiastical historian of Germany, that his sister had to watch him daily, to see that he did not start to the university with his night cap on, or with his study-gown and slippers; and it was not uncommon for him, when moving aside from the jostling crowd in the street, to step into the gutter, where he walked on and on, seemingly unconscious of where he was stepping.

The following anecdote illustrates sevmind of medical students, and the absence of ditto sometimes in cabmen: A medical student returning home late in a cab, recollected, upon finding he had no money to pay his fare, that he had dropped two mamma, before I sleep." LOVE AND A FARM.

Quite a number of odd and amusing scenes frequently occur with parties who visit the probate court for the purpose of securing the necessary document to legalize their marriage. But the other day a young man, about twenty-one, accompa- people then think of the revolutions that nied by one of the opposite sex, equally as young, ascended the main steps of the court house, and then, on being directed to the probate court, took up the line of march for its hallowed precincts. Reaching the door, he refused to enter.

The rustic maiden, who was extremely anxious to see the marriage programme carried to a successful issue, looked upon him with plending eyes, and then, taking him by the hand in the most tender manner, beseeched him to enter the court and stripped herself in her poverty, and the obtain the license.

JOAN OF ARC.

Just at this time when a new Joan of Arc is reported as appearing at Tours, Miss Anna Dickinson's lecture on the historical Joan is of interest. The following is a synopsis of the lecture :

"Miss Anna Dickinson commenced by speaking of women in France from the fifteenth to the nineteenth century, and their disabilities, legal, social and otherwise. Passing from this, she said that among the many names which would pass down to eternity was that of Joan of Arc, who ended strife and won victory for France, the nation that had brought untold misery upon itself by excluding women from the throne. In 1316, when a young woman was sole heir to the throne, many believed then, as since, that as women had not the power to enforce the law, she should have no voice in making it, and the young girl, the rightful heir, was thrust aside and a man placed on the throne. Little did the were to ensue, and that great victories would be won and peace established by another young girl. In 1422, at the death of Charles the Sixth, France had been stripped and bared to the skin. The peasants were impoverished and famine followed. Charles the successor was a weakling, while Bedford, who represented England, was the most powerful monarch of his time. It was the power of weakness against strength. The nation gay young French nobles threw themselves into the struggle to win or die, French nationality, but the teeth of hun-"Melindy, I can't. The old man will ger and cold gnaw through the strongest resolutions, and Orleans stretched out her hands to the King for belp. Suddenly, through the dark a light came, and a voice like a tempest was heard saying: "I am come from God to save you.

"The speaker then proceeded to give a biography of the celebrated subject of her lecture. Joan of Arc was born in 1411, in Domemy, a little village of Lorpendent peasant, a man whose independence came from actual ownership of the soil. Her mother was an industrious and pious woman, and a skilled workwoman. Joan as a child was tender, benevolent, pious, earnest and unselfish. She was not content in being at church simply at matins and vespers, and she was so imhaving you till Christmas, I will marry pressed with church bells that she gave her scanty earnings to the bell ringer to prolong their melodies. While her companions played she prayed, and in the "Well, let her go then till Christmas, great forest of the Vosges, near her father's house, she often strayed, gathering vague inspiration from the solemu under-"I'll toe the scratch then, by jingo, if tone of the trees. Her home stood at the crossing of two great roads, where many travelers passed, and the tales of France they told grew sadder and sadder Thus reassured on being married by as years passed by. The girl was intensely loyal. Her sentiment for France was not a sentiment, it was a divine passion. She loved France, believed in recreant to his promise, we will wager France, and was entirely devoted to her country. As she hears the proverb that France, lost through a woman, shall be Lorraine, solitude, nature, prayer and faith feed the awful hope, and she believes she is destined through God to relieve France of her enemies. In a vision, she tells us. St. Michael appeared, and told her God had chosen her to crown the King, Henry VII., and drive out the armies of the victorious English.

> " Miss Dickinson then gave a glowing portrayal of the visions of the deliverance of France, which fastened themselves spon the mind of the young girl. But the parents of Joan of Arc did not believe in her visions, and finally an uncle, who loved her, took her to his house, and then went as her ambassador to the Governor to say that his niece was sent by God to raise the siege of Orleans and crown the King. The Governor derides both uncle and niece, but finally the King sends for her to come into his presence. Armed and equipped she traverses one hundred and four leagues of territory, every fortress of which is in the hands of the enemy, and crossing eight rivers which have no bridges, is finally received by the King, who disguises himself, and appears among his courtiers. She at once recognizes him, and as a last hope he listens to her plans, and she is placed in command with the title of general.

"The details of the famous siege of Orleans, the terrible attack on Paris, in which Joan was wounded, and the crowning of the King at Rheims were then given, and after a thrilling and feeling account of Joan's betrayal, imprisonment and death at the stake, the fair lecturer closed with an appeal to women to live in such a manner as to be worthy to belong to the sex of which Joan of Arc was the spotless, innocent and modest representative, and to keep her in recol-
