Fairs for Charitable Parposes. The Fair season, with all its bewildering attractions and its expensive delights, has already made a brilliant commencement in several of our large cities. People may con- Near Pa. R. R. Depot, Johnstown, Pa., tend as long and earnestly as they will that when anything is to be contributed to assist a good cause, it should be a free gift, without even a partial equivalent in the shape of some fancy article or other, but the fact remains that Fairs are popular, and that money in large amounts can thus be more readily raised than by any other agency. There seems to be some exciting influence which men exercise over each other when assembled in large numbers, which prompts to commit acts and incur expenses which they would otherwise shun. This excitement is very evident at auction sales, and is also to be seen at fairs and bazaars. Thus, susceptible young men and doting husbands often find that even a single visit to a fair becomes time, with no end of fun and excitement, and must expect to pay for the music. They know too that what has gone from their CARBON OfL, &c., &c. pockets will find its way into the treasury of some laudable association, and perhaps do more good there than if it had been expend. | most reasonable terms ed for some other personal gratification.-Still, on account of the lotteries and raffles which are in vogue on these occasions, many | GEO. C. K. ZAHM. JAS. B. ZAHM. good people continue to set their faces steadfastly against all such methods of raising money. While we sympathize with those who entertain such views, yet if it became necessary for us to raise a large sum of money for a charitable purpose, we should n t object to the assistance of a fair on a modfied scale at least. It is a hard matter tor fuse the solicitations of some fair sales woman. even if the articles offered are utterly valueless, and have not, moreover, even the value of attractiveness. Yet it is not an easy neatter to werm money out of a hard, calculating business man or an unfeeling worldly woman. The bewitching eyes and the charming man ners of some lady friend may seduce you into investing rather too heavily in flowers and other beautiful but fading commodities. Still it is better to bleed a little in this way than to have to call a dozen or more times on some wealthy person who could give a. thousand and never feel it, to obtain only a dollar or two, given most gendgingly, or perhaps a cool rebuff and a flat refusal .-Private contributions did much to assist the sick and wounded in our war, but in most sections the largest amounts came from the proceeds of fairs. Who that attended them | June 10, 1869. will ever forget the grand Sanitary Commission Fairs of New York and Brooklyn, with all their varied agencies for obtaining funds for the good cause? Presently, we have loitered Home & Norton, General Agents, 64 Fourth so long chatting that we must purchase a bunch of flowers for our wife, a boquet for our sweetheart, or a little nosegay for our bachelor button-hole. Having completed the purchase, we can frame no excuse for further delay, and drift away with the throng. BOOTS AND SHOES various other stands with their show of nee dlework of divers patterns and materials, and the endless variety of articles of luxury, taste, and convenience, all offered by such and other such desirable property; we spend all our loose cash, and more too. But there is an end of all things, and we finally go out of the fair, empty in pocket, but loaded with enough plunder to set up a small bazaar on our account Have we not described the experience of hundreds of the sterner sex who frequent a good investment after all? The money went for a good cause, that is certain, and they spent one or more evenings very pleasantly. Is the chance to see so many levely women to go for nothing? No, perish the thought! So long as there is any true love of art in our souls, let us gaze on nature's beauties with full as much admiration as upon its choicest counterfeit. Fairs have their drawbacks, doubtless, but so long as they present so many attractions and do so much good, we must give them our approvain spite of ourselves, since we never yet entered one without spending twice the amount originally agreed upon .- Hearth and Home.
