A Sitting Room "Interviewed."

BY A BOY OF THE PERIOD.

I returned home the other morning from market, and upon entering the hall of the house heard a confused and buzzing sound. Not being able to discern from what part of the house the strange noise came. I advanced stealthily through the hall and into the sitting room, into which the first rays of the morning sun were falling from the eastern window, and there found the forniture engaged in a wordy war. The clock was on a strike for the fiftieth time that day, and grumblingly declared it could not afford to run any longer on tick. The piano remonstrated with the clock for its insubordination, and advised it to weight. It replied by ad monishing the piano to take care of its notes, which would be due when Mrs —— came down stairs. The piano, somewhat abashed. made no reply, but its friend, the chimney, addressing the clock, said sententiously, "My draft is good." Here the clock catching a sarcastic smile from the window, turned upon the new antagonist saying "You need not be putting on airs over your sash; the old thing is soiled and needs washing. One would suppose you had enough to do to look after your own concerns." The window meekly replied," It is true I have panes, but I try to make light of them." "And so you do, dear," said the fire-place, which baving an elegant mantel, was not at all envious of the window, although it said in an undertone, it did consider the paper a stack up thing. The centre-table now broke in saying it was a shame it should be compelled to stand there every evening on its naked legs before visitors, while the bureau. up stairs kept all the drawers. The fire had challenged James to a game of poker, (the plane having refused to play because as it said, the door had taken the key, and had accordingly been hung.) but James had no sooner dealt, than the ashes, not having been invited to take a hand, flew up in a rage and threatened to choke him, and the soot followed from the same reason and blackened his eye. Three chairs and a patient stool stood huddled in a corner of the room; they had been well caned and were silent. The side-board had a good flow of spirits and was bontering a pitcher, and three or four tumblers, saying they did not dare either to pitch or tumble, not withstand ing their arrogant pretensions. I observed that for some reason they were all down on the carpet, which had been worsted in the contest and was now bound and prestrate on the floor. The stove stood quietly warming its feet and smoking its pipe; and the mirror only looked on and reflected. The carpet said it had to bear all the tax, and said the candlestick was a brazen thing. Washington's picture was in no frame for justing .- Venango Spectator.

VERY SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.—It is a singular, but not less true, remark in a late work, that Jefferson was born just eight years after his predecessor Adams; Medison eight years after Jefferson; Monroe eight years after Madison; and John Quincy Adams eight years after Monroe. Another curious fact to be observed is that Adams was just 66 years old when he retired ; Jefferson was 65; Madison was 66; Monroe was 66; and John Quincy Adams, had he been elected to a second term, would have been 66. Adams, Jefferson and Monroe all died on the 4th of July.

A destructive war between France and England was occasioned by a quarrel between two boy princes.

The "Grasshopper War," which took place about the time the Pilgrims came to New England in the Mayflower, between two Indian tribes, was brought about in this way : An Indian woman, with her little son, went to visit a friend belonging to another ribe. The little fellow caught a large grasshopper on the road and carried it with him. A lad from the other tribe wanted it, but he refused to give it up. A quarrel nsued, which soon drew the fathers and mothers into the dispute, and ere long the chiefs were engaged in a war which nearly exterminated one tribe.
