ALTOONA CITY, March 2, 1871.

FRIEND MAC-Ou Tuesday evening last, between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock, that large and handsome edifice, the First Presbyterian church, was filled to repletion with a select audience to witness the nuptials of Miss Annie Rose, the handsome and accomplished daugh ter of B. F. Rose of this city, with Mr. John McCartney, one of our most respected young citizens. After a few impressive and well timed remarks by the officiating clergyman. Rev. Wallace, the happy pair were united in what must to them prove the silken bonds of matrimony; after which they were warmly congratulated by their nu nerous friends and well wishes. The same evening they started on an extended wedding tour, which I hope will be as pleasant as I trust their future lives will be long, prosperous and happy. May neither of them ever know sorrow, but may they, on the contrary, be greeted every now and then with a beautiful budding "Rose" in their pesceful household, though it come to them under another name that will prove as sweet -- that of McCariney. An old man named Boyle, a laborer in the
