Local Correspondence

ALTOONA CITY, April 5, 1871. FRIEND MAC-Inasmuch as local news is er-

ceeding scarce, I will spread myself this week on one of the prevaiing methods for swindling adopted in this city. I refer to the art of begging-not "begging the question," as do the advocates of the school system here, but beg. ging for a livelihood, as do many old as well as young persons in our midst. Here is a case in point : Not long since two ladies, mother and daughter, both renowned for their charity and kindly dispositions, were enjoying themselves in a social chat together at the home of the former, when they were called on by a young and rather good looking German girl, some 18 or 20 years of age, who with tears in her eyes told a very pathetic story about having several little brothers and sisters to provide for, and concluded by imploring the good ladies to give her anything in the way of money, cast-off clothing, etc. Her appeal was so touching that it enlisted the sympathies of mother and daughter, the latter of whom came down very handsomely with her offerings. Apparently, very thankful for the kindness shown ber, the girl shortly after prepared to depart, remarking very ungardedly as she did so that she must return home in time to prepare dinnst for her father. "Why," remarked the lady of the house, in protound astonishment, "is your father living ?" "Wby, yes," she replied with the utmost simplicity, "my father is iving and owns two good horses and a wagon, besides two houses, one of which he owes among darlers in gentlemen's dress goods in this money on, and we are now begging a little to

This same generous lady was imposed up on not long since by an oily-tongued individ been slaughtered in this place, went the way that who had inducted himself into the good graces of some of our best foreign born citizens by representing that he was from the Emerald Isle and that he was a regularly ordained priest, and fully empowered to collect money for the establishing of a school under the charge of the Sisters of Charity at Omaha, Nebraska. He was introduced to the family of the lady in question, among others, and they, having a profound respect for a priest and a cause so laudable, contributed accordingly. After getting their donation, he thanked them with apparent succerity, gave them his blessing in these words : "Pax domini sic semper vobiscum, per omnia sacula saculorum." of accommodations for man and beast. This and then betook himself to the outside of the house, and sete long left the city for other scenes-shortly after which it was discovered friends who know how to appreciate the good that he was a swindler and a cheat. Beware

Not long since a woman seemingly in the most abject and distressing circumstances, with a young child in her arms, was observed begging from door to door in one of our principal streets, and as her appearance excited the deepest sympathy, she was pretty successful in her mission. But her distress and misery was all assumed, for her husband is not only living and doing well, but owns property and is having his children educated at a select school. Two or three other cases of a similar finture internations for judicial honors were kept in the church during the entire of have come to my knowledge, but I have already occupied more space than I intended with this subject, and hence I will delay further notice until next week The cases above reported are sufficient to point a moral, if not adorn a tale, and need no elucidation at my hands. I only regret that the working classes. who are invariably the most charitable and can least afford such impositions, are the most likely to be detrauded in this way.

A terrible accident, resulting in instant death, occurred here to day. A young man fair to presume they were a mixture of Protest-named Samuel Baer, son of a widow woman ants and Catholics, as most German nations are. who has a number of small children dependent upon her for support, attempted to get on a ably at fault when he esserts that George the train of cars while in motion but unifertunate-ly missed his footing and tell beneath the wheels. Fourteen care passed over hun and wheels. Fourteen cars passed over him and A young man employed in one of the blacksmith shops of the Company had his foot badly smashed in some way to day. I did not learn name or particulars. It is currently reported and generally be lieved that our mutual young friend G. Y. is shortly to "leave this state and climb a tree" matrimonially. When "the time arroven am striven," I shall advise you of it: In the meantime permit me to say that I hope the report is true, as well for his own sake as for the sake of the "piece of calico" immediately interested. So mote it be, T. I. M.

COMMUNICATION.

WILMORE, April 4, 1871. Mr. Editor-Your paper of the 25th ult. con-tained another article signed by "Soltero." in which, in the first place, he charges me with not being the author of my former communication, and says: "Those who know the lady will not be prepared to adalit that she composed the epistle," etc. No's I would respectfully ask "Soltero" on what authority he makes such an assortion as be end to entirely macounited "Soltero" on what subbority be makes such an assertion, as he and I are entirely unacquainted, and consequently he is not the proper person to judge whether I have the ability to write the article in question or not. I am sorry that "Soltero" was induced to pen his last article, for hitherto he has had many friends among Protestants as well as Catholics, and no one over dreamed that the heart of one and no one ever dreamed that the heart of one so young contained so much venom; and it is a great misfortune to his family that such a long incestral line did not culminate in a hero, or -it least a gootleman. But it is rather singular that "Soltero" and I have the same opinion of that each other's ability to write, for judging from his former communications, I do not believe ie is the author of the last one that appeared over his signature, for the great difference in language, style, and every other feature, is so apparent that a child could detect the differ-ence; and the only hypothesis upon which we can base an opinion that he wrote the article, is his own assertion that he is a Milesian. Such authority as Strabo Diodorns and holy St. Je-rome informs us that the Milesian branch of the Celtie race were calmibils who ate their aged parents instead of exalting their into heroes. Physiologists and naturalists agree that constiional peculiarities of nations, and even of individuals, develope themselves after genera-tions and even centuries have passed away.--So if "Soltero" really was the author of his last epistic, the ferocity manifested therein must be attributed to a fresh outcropping of the spirit of his ancestors. "Soltero" intimates that I am "a rag upon every bish," etc. I was born a Lutheran, was reared in that faith, and am still a Lutheran; and whether or not his insulting remarks were intended to wound the feelings of the commu-nity at large, or only those of my humble self personally, is best known to himself. If his malicious shafts were directed against me alone. I desire to assure him that my feelings are imscathed, for

No genflomin will wound my feelings, And no other can.

"Soltero" appears to be very much exercised because he thinkf we did not know that Colum-bus was a Catholic. But just here let me say iat Columbus, with all his Catholicity, w the first navigator who discovered the Ameri-can continent. John Cabot, it that time in the maritime service of Henry VIIth of England. was the first man who had the honor lociscover this continent, and took possession of It in the King's name nearly fourteen months before Columbus reached the main hand. Whether Cabot was a Catholic or not, history does not aform us. Of the thirteen original States, but as (Maryland) was settled by Catholics, and at he time of the Revolution there were probably enty Protestants to one Catholic in this count, for out of the fifty-six signers to our glori claration of Independence, there was but litary Catholic (Charles Carroli). When one solitary Catholic (Charles Carroll). When "Soltero" says that Catholics were the first to prochaim liberty of conscience on our shores, I presume he refers to Lord Beitimore, who allewed perfect religious liberty to the colonists under his charter, but in doing so I must say that he exhibited a very different spirit from that usually manifested by the Church of which he was an adherent, which leads me to wonder whether his Lordship would have interfered with me for offering up a few simple proyers in school, if I had been teaching in prose days. If Catholics are the liberty-loving recepte he represents them to be, why do they not admire and cherish the names of Garibaidi, Victor Eman-nuel, and the millions who for years have been batting for the rich bein of freedom—the price-less gem of liberty? Instead of this, I am sorry to say that American efficients, who enjoy all the blessings of civil and religious liberty, lavished out their rold to sustain one of the most abso-iute despatishes the world ever contained, and that too in direct opposition to the wishes of the people over whom it holds sway. A merican citizens sustaining despotism! Truly a sight over which angels might weep. Were not Amer-ican Catholies sending gold to "crush out" the life of bleeding, suffering Italy? As the Hessians were from Hesse Cassel, it is

Defender of the Falth, conferred by the Pope himself upon Henry the Lighth? We freely give France great credit for the assistance she gave us in our Revolutionary struggle, and sincerely hope that our French allies, in their efforts to assist us, were actuated by pure motives-by love for us and not hatred for Protestant England.

But it matters not to me, nor to any of us, what the nationality or religious faith of our Revolutionary fathers were. Enough for us to know that with shoulder to shoulder and hand in hand they went through the struggle and nchieved success. Liberty was their watch-word, and for this they fought, and shed their word, and mingled their prayers with those of blood, and mingled their prayers with those of Washington to that great Being who holds vic-tory or defeat in the bollow of Mishand. They together achieved our independence and trans-mitted it a precious inheritance to us, and when discriminate between Catholics and Protest-ants-Irish, German, French, or patriots of liberty from any other clime may my pen and the hand that holds it in grasp never write

We would respectfully ask "Soltero" to con-trast the condition of the United States, civilly and religiously, with those other nations of the American continent that were settled excha-sively by people from Catholic Spain, and where they have remained Spaniards and Catholics, and see if he can conceive what causes the dif-ference. Here yence and order reigns-there, in a nation whose flag is constantly trailing in the dust, and whose people, we verily believe, do not permit the sacred volume to be read in school or out of it, if indeed they have schools, police demande i five dollars fine, which Mr. Capp hesitated to pay, when he was fined five dollars more. Now we believe this is the persecu-tion "Soltero" refers to, and instead of having been brought about by the English King, it was brought about by the intrigues of Catharine Medicis and her advisers, with the sauction of her advisers and the approval of the elair. Pagan Rome slew thousands, but Chris-tian Rome has slain her tens of thousands, and persecutions have continued for centuries, with rare interruptions. It was in commemoration of these that Milton composed his grand sonnet:

"Soltero" labors to show that Lutheranism had no existence prior to the Reformation, and from his letter we might infer that he believes that Luther professed to be a reformer of the Gospel of Christ. No intelligent Protestant or Catholic entertains such an opinion. Luther only professed to reform the abuses that crept into the Chuech, and all will agree that a repe formation was necessary when a Pope dioni-face VIII) taught that Christianity was a "hu-erative fable." which charges were clearly es-"Soltero" labors to show that Lutheranism face VIR) taught that Christianity was a "he-crative fable" which charges were clearly es-tablished by the testimony of twenty-three with nesses at his posthumous trial.
