IS THERE NO REMEDY!

We pity a drunkard! If there be one man we unqualifiedly sympathize with more than another, and whose degredation we commisserate, it is that man who has acquired and cultivates an appetite for intoxicating drink. We are not political moralists in this regard, nor are we the advocates of a political temperance reform. But this crime of intemperance is of such monstrous proportions and contributes so fearfully to the demoralization, misery, crime and woe of mankind, in this enlightened day, that we fain would look the evil in the face for a single moment, and suggest some remedy.

It is painful to watch the fearful ravages of this crime of intemperance in our own community. Desolated homes, wrecked fortunes. blighted prospects, broken constitutions, intellects hopelessly impaired, souls past all feeling of self respect, or shame, tell a sad story, and the impression is irresistable, that we see in our circumscribed sphere of observation only a fraction of that evil which pervades society all about us.

Can nothing be done? Is there no remedy for the growing, terrible malady, intemperance? The State provides for its lunatics, its orphans, its deaf and dumb, its seldiers' erphans-why not provide for its hopelessly, helplessly intemperate? Is there any class more dependent and more wretched than those given over to intemperate habits? We speak now of the extreme cases visible upon every hand. After many struggles for the mastery, the appetite conquers and the man goes to excess and death, as surely as water runs down hill. He has fallen again and again and finally gives up the effort to reform, and plunges down the stream to disgrace and ruin, with none to stay the tide. He has ceased to be master of himself, and has become reckless of consequences, and, in a word, is no longer a free agent. In fact, hundreds of people confined in lunatics asys lums are much better able to take care of themselves and would be far less injurious to society if set at liberty than a confirmed drunkard.

Is the case hopeless? In many instances we think not; but even in the most desperate ones we are bound, if we cannot cure, at least to arrest the evil influence. Should not confirmed drunkards be regarded as fit subjects for legal interference and upon proof of habitual drunkenness should they not be committed to an inebriate asylum under the control of the State, and kept there until a cure shall be effected; and if cure shall prove impossible, should be not be detained as one not capable of being entrusted with

In this way many noble natures might be rescued and restored to usefulness, whilst persons totally brutalized would at least be kept from inflicting further injuries on themselves or others.

The fear of being thus confined would in many cases act as a salutary check on those who might be taking the first steps in intemperance, and many who have felt the influence too strong for them would gladly seek a refuge from themselves in such an institution. The experiment has been tried to a limited extent in other States with considerable success. New York has her Insbriate Asylum at Binghampton, and while its conduct is not just what it should be, it influence too strong for them would gladly is a noble charity, and will yet work a re- Cooking, Parlor and Heating Stoves formation which good men everywhere will applaud and appreciate. Plausible objection may be urged against State Insbriate Asylums, but desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and every one who values the bodies, and, above all, the souls of men, must grapple with the evil of drunkenness

A TOUCHING INCIDENT .- There is one touching incident in the life of William Wirt. In his younger days he was a victim to that passion for intoxicating drinks which seems peculiarly the bane of our profession. Affianced to a beautiful and acomplished young woman, he had made and broken repeated pledges of amendment, and she, after patiently and kindly enduring his disgraceful habit, had at length dismissed him, deeming him incorrigible. Their next meeting, after his dismissal, was in a public street of the city of Richmond. William Wirt lay drunk and asleep, on the sidewalk, on a hot summer day, the rays of the sun pouring down on his uncovered head, and the flies crawling over his swollen features. As the young lady approached in her walk, her attention was attracted by the spectacle, strange to her eyes, but alas! so common to others who knew the victim, as to attract little remark. She did not at first reognize the Have now in Store the largest and best selected sleeper, and was about to hasten on, when she was led by one of those impulses which form the turning points in human lives, to scrutinize his features. What was her emotion when she recognized in him her discarded lover! She drew forth her hankerchief and carefully spread it over his face, and hurried away. When Wirt came to himself, he found the handkerchief, and in one corner the initials of the beloved name. With a heart almost breaking with grief and remorse, he made a new vow of reformation. He kept that yow, and he married the owner Iron Founders and Mill Furnishers, of that handkerchief. Well might be preserve the handkerchief, as he did, all his life, guarding it with the jealous care with which Othello kept the Egyptian charmer's gift, and "making it a darling like his precious

How A CLERK GOT PROMOTED .- The Troy Times tells this story of Col. James H. Hooker, an eccentric character, who COMPOUND FLUID died in that city some twenty years ago: "A remarkable man was Col. Hooker, and very eccentric withal. At times he would fairly boil over with passion, and was very violent in his speech and action. Yet be was a just man, and directed his fury against only what he deemed to be wrong and rascally. It is related of him that having a dispute with one of his clerks, the latter would not yield the point in issue to him, whereupon the Colonel undertook to put his stubborn employee out of his office. But the clerk was too much for the irate Colonel, and in the melee the old man was laid upon his back, and his countenance unpleasantly tapped. Rising from his position, he proceeded to wash his battered countenance, brushed his clothes carefully, and, seating himself, asked the victorious clerk to come to him and report. Among the many interesting incident of the Franco-Prussian war, the history of Sergeant Hoff is by no means the least interesting. The French papers were full of his wily plots for weeks. By birth he was an Alsatian. He was remarkably stern, never seen to smile; his hatred of the Prussians knew no bounds; his house had been destroyed, he said, his own father had fallen beneath the Prussian sword. He wanted only a chassepot and came into Paris almost every day as trophies of his success. General Trochu wished to decorate him with the medal of the legion of honor. Hoff refused it : HOMAS CARLAND, be would fight for nothing but revenge. Concentrated Fluid Extract BUCHU. he said. It was then proposed to give him the command of one hundred men .-That likewise he refused. He could succeed better alone. After the battle of Champagny Hoff was seen no more -People thought he was killed; it turned out that he was a Prussian spy.
