Tales, Shetches, Inecdotes, &c. THE SWITCH-TENDER'S STORY.

It ran thus: "It's nigh onto eleven years, sir, since I came on this road. For the first three years I was brakesman, and if I had stock to it I might have become a conductor by this time-who knows .-My character was good and I've always been a steady man, but you see it wasn't to be. My old woman always objected to me running on the train, it kept me so much away from home, not to speak of the danger, and at the end of the third year, when our little boy was born, she begged so hard to give it up that I consented, and the company put me in this place, where I've been ever since. It's not hard, I've only got to tend one switch and do odd jobs about the depot, the pay is just the same as what I got before, only there's no chance for promotion, but then I'm always at home, which makes it up. I live only a little way across the bridge, in the outskirts of the town, yonder, on the other side of the river-a small white house with an elm tree in the SUMMITVILLE BOROUGH.

"So you think the river is very beautiful at this season of the year? Well, sir, I dare say it is. I thought so once looking at it now, nor have I done so for many a day. Its green banks and its clear water, with the sunshine sparkling on it, only makes it seem the crueler to me, as if it laughed over the misery it has caused to human beings; but my opinions haven't got anything to do with what you come to ask me about so I'll try and get to the point at once.

"It will be three years come Monday, the 13th of next month, which is May, that after eatin' my breakfast and smokin' my pipe, which latter operation I generally gits through with about seven o'clock, I started across the bridge, takin' with me my little boy, Willie, who was at this time just risin' o' five years. He was awfully tickled at the idea of bein' allowed to go out with me, as his mother kept him mostly around the house, havin' like nearly all women, great fear of the trains. I don't think, sir, I ever seen a finer mornin'-the sun well nigh up, but not too warm, with a white cloud here and there in the blue sky, the trees and grass green and fresh, and glistenin' with the dew, and underneath us the river flowin' bright and clear, just as you see it now, sir. My heart felt light, and havin' nothin' on my mind-I had just finished pavin' for my house the week before-I began to think on comparin' my troubles with my blessings that after all it would be hard to find a better place than this same much-abused world we live in.

almost time for the train, I refused my A Festive Account of a Mule A Bachelor's Ghost -- A Warning permission, and taking him some ten or fifteen yards from the track, sat him down at the foot of a tree-the maple vonderand bade him remain there till I called.

"The time for the train came and passed, and still no signs of it. I grew Florida. It is decidedly rich: nervous and did not notice my boy. Minute after minute passed away, and at last when I began to be certain that some accident had occurred it hove in sight just five minutes before the express train was due, which I knew could not be more than two miles behind. I saw at once the cause of the delay; the train was unusually long and heavy, and the engine No. 42, which the fireman had christened "Old Ricketty," was the worst on the road. The switch was all ready, but the train moved so slowly that the last car had hardly left the main track, when I heard the whistle of the express, and the next moment she rounded the bend at full speed. I knew that I didn't have any too much time to get the switch in position, and went at my work with a will when suddenly I heard a child's scream. and turning round I saw little Willie struggling in the water. For an instant the sight of my child's danger overpowered every other consideration and I sprang for the river, but before I got half the distance the hoarse whistle of the approaching train rang in my ear like a trumpet, and the thought of my duty, and the hundreds of lives that would be sacrificed if I deserted my post, went through my brain like a flash of lightning, while all the time there was a feeling about my heart I can't tell in so many words-I only knew it was worse than death-beseeching me to save my boy. "The whole thing couldn't have lasted more than two seconds, and how the one feeling got the better of the other I never knew. I have no recollection of turning back, but the next thing I remember 1 was at the switch working away like mad. I never had such strength. I felt that I could have wrenched up the solid iron rails in my agony, and bent them like straw; and I did not seem to see anything about me distinctly, neither rails nor ties -but dimly and vaguely, as if in a dream, or at a great distance. What I did see as plainly as I do now, although it was behind me, was the clear and beautiful river flowing on in the morning sun, and in the midst of it little Willie weakly struggling for help, while the bright, cruel waves smote him in the face and laughed. I had no ear for the nearing train, but all I heard-or seemed to, for I can't rightly say-were his cries to his father for help, growing fainter and fainter; and then the horrible bubbling sound, as he sank finally, and his last breath found its way to the surface. "At length the switch was in position, and although it's a short job at best, and I must have accomplished it at that time with a quickness I can never again equal. yet it seemed longer than the longest summer's day; but it was done, and I rushed to the river and gazed eagerly around for some sign that might tell me where to plunge in to rescue my child; but there was nothing, nothing but the sunlight that glistened brightly on the little wavemyself; but I don't take my pleasure in lets that smiled mockingly in my face as they burried onward. I don't remember anything further. There was a great choking in my throat, a huge weight of lead seemed to fall on my brain, and all was black. When I came to my senses it was three weeks afterward, with my old woman-God bless her-sitting alongside of me holdin' my hand in hers. The doctor said I had made a close miss of it, and at first I feft sorry that I had lived at all: but that didn't last long, for I knew there was another one-she who sat beside me-who had suffered more than I had and stood it nobly, so I tried to get better in order to console her. It was two weeks more before I got out of bed. and quite two months before I was able to go around. I will never be the same

Ride in Florida.

We have had a hearty laugh, says the Pine Bluff Press, over the following article of an epistolary nature, written by a New Yorker sojourning in Fernandina,

Well, I'm down here in Florida percolating through the sand-all sand-much of it as white as snow. A very quiet State is Florida. No bustle. No confusion. Nobody in a hurry. To morrow is as good as to-day to do anything, and better. Time is of no account. The climate is glorious. Just one beautiful day after another till you fail to appreci-

The boys insisted that I needed relaxation. My health required it. I had a pretty fair article of health, I thought; enough to last me as long as I lived .-But I must accumulate a stock for future use. The South was the place to get it. And riding was healthy. The sand is too deep to ride, except on horse-back, so I thought I would take a ride. I applied to the livery man for a horse. He had one. He looked sorrowfully at me, as though he pitied me. Did I ever ride a mule? I never had. He had as good riding horses as were ever saddled, but if I wanted a "Rock me to Sleep, Mother" style of a ride, I should take a mule. I don't consider myself a first-class judge of mules. I had some vague notions in regard to them; supposed they would do a large amount of work with very little feed, and were immortal. I had read of one being driven over the same route by the same boy for eighty-seven years, and he was a young mule yet. Bring forth the mule. He was brought, ot so old but I can get off an animal of that kind as quick as a boy. Then I looked at the mule to see if he was hurt. He didn't appear to be. Then I inquired around to see how I was. I reported an abrasion on the left hip, and a contusion on the lower end of my back. | dead warned me against it ? Then I thought I would pronounce a lefthanded blessing on that mule, and on his fore-fathers and fore-mothers before him, and on his children after him. But I didn't. I wondered if he would stand fire. If I had had a pistol I would have put the muzzle to his ear and tried him some day and get burt. But I had no

A SINGULAR "TAIL "- Recently a lovesick swain was paying court to his dulcina She had smuggled him into the parlor, and the darkness only served to conceal her blushes, while John told the story of his love. The muttered words reached the parental ear, and coming suddenly into the room he demanded to know of Mary who it was she had with her. "It's the cat, sir," was the mumbling reply,-'Drive it out of here," thundered paterjumilias. "Seat!" screamed Mary, and then, sotto vece : ("John meaow a little!") John set up a woful yout, "That cat's got a cold," remarked the parent. John yowled louder than ever, "Confound it, bring a light, and scure the thing out." This was too much, and John made a leap for the window, carrying glass, frame and all with him. "Thunder ! what a cat !" said the parent, contemplating the ruin after the light was brought; "I never saw anything like it, and confound it, its tail s made out of broadcloth," as he viewed a fluttering remnant hanging from the

A FOND father, blessed with eleven children, recently, business being dull, took the early train out to his happy home and went up stairs to put the child ren to bed. Being missed from the smoking room, his wife went up stairs to see what was going on; upon opening the door she exclaimed : "Why, dear, what for mercy's sake are you doing?" "Why." says he, , wifey, I am putting the children to bed, and having them say their little prayers." "Yes," says wifey, "but this is not one of ours." Sure enough, he had got one of the neighbor's children all undressed, and had to redress it and send it home. After that he called the roll every morning and night.
