Lecal Correspondence.

LORETTO, PA., June 21, 1871. EDITOR CAMBRIA FREEMAN-This, the 25th Anniversary of the Coronation of Pope Pius IXth, is a great day throughout the Catholic world—a great day because our Holy Father has had (if he be living, and I trust he is.) a privilege that no other Pope since St. Peter has had, the privilege of reigning a quarter of a century. And in obedience to the wish of our worthy Bishop, the members of St. Michael's church took great pleasure in celebrating the occasion and in having the privilege of testifying respect and sympathy for our Holy Father, for his unbounded piety, earnest zeal, and exemplary defense of our holy church, as has been most elegantly expressed in the appended resolutions. The celebration here was in the following order: At 8 o'cleck, a. m., Solemn High Mass was chanted by Rev. Father Bush, assisted by Rev. Father Neason and Rev. Father Bowen, after which the order of the exercises and the object for which intended were stated by Rev. Father Bush in a neat and eloquent address, and was followed by an address by the small boys. Next, Mr. Cronan, as student of St. Francis' College, delivered an oration of some length, giving a biographical sketch of our illustrious Pope. Mr. Cro nan is an easy, graceful speaker, and delivered a very pleasing discourse. And then Rev. Father Neason addressed the congregation, taking as his subject "The Temporal Power of the Pope." Father Neason is one of the most eloquent and impressive speakers in the fact of a barn at New Florence in an diocese, and his oration on this occusion was ale condition the other day. On three different occasions last week a slight quivering of the earth was felt at North Oak-land Church, six miles east of this place. This created not a little sensation among the citizens of the neighborhood, some going so far as to assert that it was a veritable earthquake; but the strangest part of the whole thing was the appearance of oil in a well owned by Adam Richart. On Saturday morning last Mr. Rich-art sent his son to the well for a bucket of water, and was surprised to find it covered for about two inches deep with a greenish liquid resembling crude oil, and upon a further ex-amination it proved such. Mr. Richart at first thought that some one had, either through maliciousness or a desire to raise an oil excite-ment, poured it in the well, but these both proved erroneous, for as fast as the water is ex-hausted and refills, the oil makes its appear-ance. Mr. G. W. Shaffer, of this place, visited the well on Monday last, and tells us that sever-al buckets of water were drawn, and a pint of a light colored crude petroleum taken from each. This is conclusive evidence that oil exeach. This is conclusive evidence that oil exists in North Oakland, and that too in no small quantities, and before many weeks we may see that section of our country swarming with oil operators and fortune seekers.

FOURTH OF JULY .- We know of no preparations being made here to celebrate the coming anniversary of American Independence, but all around us our Catholic friends are going to aid their respective churches pecuniarily by holding picnics on that day. St. Augustine, Wilmore, and Gallitzin, we know, are to be the scenes of such festivities, and no one will be disappointed who visits either of those places on that day. Picnics are among the most rational and pleasant sources of recreation and enjoyment, and if any of our readers can make themselves ubiquitous, we advise them to "swing round the circle" and spend a few of their stamps at each of these hospitable villages. At any rate, let all these picnics receive a bountiful patronage.

[ORIGINAL.] AN EPIGRAM

Respectfully Dedicated to R. L. Johnston, Esq. June 18th makes me fifty-four, And very young at that; And although I am very poor, Yet I am very fat.

I should not wrote the word birth-day, Because it is not right.
But as the family record shows,
Day should be written night.

My parents both from Scotland came, Yet I'm of Irish blood, And while I'm really made of clay, I am not made of mud.

When young I grew up very fast,
Though I was very slow;
My schoolmates, too, I often fought,
Yet never struck a blow.

I married, yet I have no wife, Four children are but three; They're often wrong when they de write, But they are dear to me.

My eye-sight, true, has failed me some, And how else could it be? And though I quickly see a saw,

My hair and beard are very black, Though both are turning gray, And then the weakness in my back Grows stronger every day.

I cannot say that I am sick, Though I am far from well; My future, too, I prophesy, Although I can't foretell.

I never yet did take a voic, But I voic I will to-day; And sure I'll keep the vow I take, 'Till it breaks all away. I have been busy all my life,

But never worked a stroke; And while I'm a whole hearted man, Yet my poor heart is broke As seamen often see the land Before they land from sea, So if the puns I make are dull, You're sharp enough to see. I want this writing put in print, And I want it printed right; The little errors I don't see You can correct from sight.

I'm growing better every day,
Though I have ceased to grow,
Because I want a place above
If I don't go below.

I dedicate this to a friend, Though he may be a foe; With wit I do love to contend— You witness this I know

And now take my respects yourself, But give them to your friends, And where my epigram begins, There, too, it also ends. ### COMMUNICATION.

SUMMERHILL TWP., June 17, 1871.

Maggie's last effort, I will make a brief state-ment. On the 4th of last March I appeared in your local department, as I had often done be-fore, in a communication signed "Soltero." As an item of local news I then referred to a reliof mankind. glous dispute between a teacher and several of the pupils in one of our public schools. The reference was mild and gentle. I mentioned no names-pointed to no particular school-and had nothing to say for or against any denomination; but simply related a fact, and then advocated the expulsion of all religious creeds from the schools, in order that peace and harmony might be restored. All this, I believe, was just and proper; yet a few sages in our township think otherwise. Their zeal is so ardent, in fact, that rothing also will also ardent, in fact, that rothing also will also ardent. township think otherwise. Their zeal is so ardent, in fact, that nothing else will do but to turn the public schools into religious factories, where they can impress their own vague and unsettled ideas on the minds of the scholars and gradually estrange them from the religion of their parents. The difficulty in the school in question had its origin in attempts like this, so often repeated as to alarm parents and incense children to such a degree that matters assumed a boisterous appearance. Still, fanaticism, so blinded the teacher that she persisted in the cause of the disturbance. It would be superfluous to say that a teacher like this could no longer command the respect of the scholars, to whom her presence became an eye-sore in the om her presence became an eye-sore in the school and her name a by-word of reproach. A violent partizan must soon become obnoxious and inefficient, and so it was here. Two weeks after I had sent you the local item spoken of, a reply appeared in the Freeman.

The writer, however, was foreign to the purpose. Indeed, he had no room to touch up on the information I had furnished. My statement was either true or false. If true, how could it be refuted? In that event would it not have been better to let the matter was for the could it be refuted? In that event would it not have been better to let the matter pass, for the teacher's name had not been mentioned nor her school pointed out? But if I had asserted what was not true, and the writer felt himself bound to contradict me, then his reply would not be out of place, but it should bear directly on the question. This would be logical, and the effect would surely follow. Conscious, however, that I had spoken the truth, yet unwilling to hold

I had spoken the truth, yet unwilling to hold his tongue, for he is used to talking, the writer gave us a dashing article more verbose than sensible. Referring slightly to my communication, which he pretended to criticise, he took a side issue and attacked me personally. Was this honest?—was it decent? Would a scholar or a gentleman resort to such a measure? He thought to prostrate me at once and at the same time pretend that he was a woman, but I assure him that the plough-boy whom he really and truly attacked is as well posted as some men with long-tailed coats. For the truth of this assertion I refer to both our communications published in the Freeman-mine on the 4th and his on the 18th of last March.

After indulging in this personal attack, he proceeded to assail the Old Church. Accustomed to this kind of logic, upon the promulgation of which his bread and butter depend, and being unfitted by nature or education for a decent profession, he engaged in the dirty work with the utmost avidity and pleasure. Yet, although the theme was familiar, and was one that would take well with the particular class of people to whom he pandered, it was in very bad taste for him to introduce a question of theology. Perhaps he thought by that means to draw me away from the subject to which he to draw me away from the subject to which he himself could not adhere, and then conduct me into the mire of abuse. This he cannot do. I may step aside now and then to give him a thump, but it is none the less my purpose to keep him strictly to the question at issue. He may also continue, if he will, to wield an abusive pen—to revile the living and traduce the dead—but "Soltero" will not descend to that low level. To cap the climax of his absurdity, and, if possible, screen his own injunity, the and, if possible, screen his own iniquity, the writer induced a silly woman to put her name to his paper. On that account he has been named after her and is now known as Mr. Mag-gie. And now that the reader has the key to gie. And now that the reader has the key to the discussion, he knows, or can readily conjecture, who commenced it, and also whether the assertions Mr. Maggie made in his rigmarole last week are true or false. If Mr. Maggie is found guilty of misrepresentation, then his statements will be appreciated according to their value.

This is my statement, and now let me pay my respects to Mr. Maggie. That gent has always been slow, but with his last effusion he has been absurdly so. It is easy to account for the delay, however, for although Mr. Maggie is at the head of affairs, his efforts have to pass through other hands for correction, and must now be sent to Indiana county to be copied, from whence they are forwarded to Ebensburg for publication. But with all the time and attenpublication. But with all the time and atten-tion devoted to them, they are nothing more than poor, empty, ungrammatical productions, suited no doubt to the mental capacities of the Lutherans in general about Wilmore, but dis-gusting to the more refined members of that denomination elsewhere.

At the cleventh hour Mr. Maggie takes occa sion to introduce a Rev. gentleman as his op-ponent, thereby losing sight of the fact that he attacked me as "Soltero" under date of March 14th, and that he has now no reason or excuse for changing his tactics. But my reply to this insinuation has already been embodied in my statement, and to dwell on it here would be a useless repetition. But for the sake of truth, and in justice to myself, I propose to meet Miss Black in any town in this county, and in presence of three or more persons will undertake to compete with her in writing an essay on any riven subject within a certain specified time. The result will show what she and I can do. Just here, since I have introduced her name, allow me to say a word to Miss Black, inasmuch as she forces herself on my attention, and to slight her would be unpardonable. Do you not to accept or refuse, etc. know, Miss B., that modesty is the ornament of your sex? If aware of it, why did you so far overstep the bounds of modesty as to introduce yourself to the public under false colors? Had you even written those papers you should feel degraded thereby, but vanity added to dissimulation renders your position still more deplorable. No one believes that you are the author—no not even the Lutheran preacher himself, for in asking me more than once to drop the dis-cussion, as much for your sake as for his own, the Rev. gent candidly avowed that you cannot write either good sense or good grammar, and intimated to me that your brother-in-law could tell who did the writing for you. Add to this the fact that you have already appeared in print as the author of letters which you do not and cannot deny-letters which the most illiterate school girl might be ashamed of—and it will be no hard matter to make up a verdict against you on the score of intelligence. And yet you have the affrontery to set yourself up as a teacher in the public schools! Really, Miss Maggie, you are a blister on the common the common school system—a disgrace to the teacher's profession—and a sad example of impertinence and presumption. Indeed, you have dosed the system of education which placed you in a chair to instruct the rising generation, but the Joe Barker who now hides his foul character behind your mask, truly doses you in turn, and as you have consented to become his tool, you have no claim upon compassion. I am done with you, however, for the present, Miss B., and trust that others who, like yourself, torment children in school, will draw profitable instruction from the lessons ou have merited and received. Mr. Maggie now admits that his protege read a Bible and held other devotional exercises in the school. This is precisely what I asserted in the local item of which mention has been made. What, then, has all the noise been about? By this admission has Miss Maggie or "Soltero" gained the point? Let the reader judge. The preacher even held forth in the school, at the special invitation of the teacher, as he informed me himself. Now all these were religious exercises, and sectarian too at that, for Maggie is brimfull in her own way and the preacher, being a very recent neophyte, of course is not behind her. Now, can an impartial public connive at these proceedings? Are they in keeping with the spirit in which the public schools are intended to be conducted? Are they calculated to foster peace and good will among fellow citizens? Is it wise, is it prudent, for any denomination to go into a public school, or use any efforts therein, to propagate its tenets among the scholars? There is but one answer to these questions, and that is that the man or woman who dares to do these things is a disturber of the people's happiness, an enemy is brimfull in her own way and the preacher a disturber of the people's happiness, an enemy of peace, and a firebrand in the community. It will not, it cannot be tolerated. Let me now say that Maggie Black has been arraigned, tried and found unfit to have charge of any school, unless perhaps a Lutheran school. And here ends the chapter, so far at least as the real ends the chapter, so far at least as the real question at issue is concerned.

The rest of Mr. Maggie's communication is irrelevant, but for the fun of the thing I will pursue him a little further. He talks as much about the Popes as other folks do about himself. There is this difference, however,—what is said about him is true, but what he says about the Popes is false. Even if his assertions were true, what would they prove against the Church? the Popes is faise. Even if his assertions were true, what would they prove against the Church? Does he think, in his ignorance, that we pin our faith to the sleeve of any man? Jesus Christ, who is all powerful, preserves the Pope, as such, from teaching error, but as man he might be as mean and contemptible as Mr. Maggie himself without giving me the least concern. Mr. Magwithout giving me the least concern. Mr. Mag-gie knows too little about Christianity to distinguish between the office and the occupanttinguish between the office and the occupant between the teacher and what is taught. Is Christianity false because Judas was one of its apostles? Had Iscariot not an office because he committed the greatest possible crime—because he sold his master for a few pieces of silver? Surely, sir, your logic is puerile and tinsel. Do you think it would be wise to base your creed on the standard of your morality? Is Lutheranism a sham because one of its preachers tells anism a sham because one of its preachers tells lies and cheats behind the counters of a toy-shop, or because another of the cloth is necesshop, or because another of the cloth is necessitated to clear out of the city of Pittsburgh at an hour's notice on account of his immoralities in a female school? This is the way you try to reason. Really, sir, you can compete with Maggie Black in ignorance. You are a sore specimen of intelligence, and if nature had given you understanding qualified to keep pace with the wishes and principles of your heart, she would have made you one of the most dangerous men that breathes the breath of life. When neither the feelings of shame or the reproach of conscience form any bar to your malice, your neighbors might well tremble at your presence, had they not a safe refuge in the utter weakness of your understanding. Allow ter weakness of your understanding. Allow me to tell you, sir, that the Pope, whose name should not be pronounced by lips such as yours, might condescend to let you kiss his big toe, but certainly would not employ you as his chamberlain. Let me further tell you, that when you are dead and gone to play the fiddle perhaps for Lucifer and Luther, Popes will be loved and respected, as they now are, by the great bulk of those who believe in the Saviour of mankind. Dear Freeman-Before directly noticing Mr.

great bulk of those who believe in the Saviour of mankind.

Mr. Maggie still dabbles in theology. The Church is bad because her members are hot all good. Does not cockle grow with the wheat? Are his folks all saints? If there are bad Catholics, so much the better for him, for it is easier to pervert them than the good. A bad Catholic makes an excellent Lutheran. Whenever the Pope weeds his boundless domain, he throws the dirty weeds over the fence, and could anysthing be more acceptible where they fall? Luther was a bad Catholic, yet he was good enough to become the father of your religion. You have the front, sir, to say that he founded no church, but recollect that your readers are not as ignorant as you are or pretend to be. Plain evidence of facts is superior to all declarations. There is a Lutheran Church now, but was there one when Luther commenced quarreling with the Pope? Had it been even as much as heard of in any place or at any time during the first fifteen hundred years of our dispensation? Is there anything in the history, in the monuments, or in the records of Christianity to show that there was a Lutheran Church prior to the sixteenth century? Every intelligent man knows that there was not. What then becomes of your assertion? Lutheranism, dear sir, is a mere human institution, and is unable to trace its source to a higher, a holier cause, than the flery spirit of an insubordinate monk. You its source to a higher, a holier cause, than the flery spirit of an insubordinate monk. You flery spirit of an insubordinate monk. You will never prove the divinity of your creed by abusing mine. Even if mine were wrong, that would be no proof in your favor. If the first Church has failed, there is no other, and it is nonsense to belong to any. Truth, not error, can make us free, and how can you tell any man that your Church can teach the truth? The early Christians did not know it, and only a few that call themselves so at the present time bethat call themselves so at the present time be-lieve in it. As Lucifer rebelled against God, so did Luther rebel against His Church, but as Lucifer could not dethrone Him in heaven so Luther could not destroy His fair Spouse on earth. Both might draw their deluded follow-ers from light, life and grace, but the end would be their own damnation. The Church, founded more than eighteen bundred years ago by the Saviour of men, is His Church still, as she al-ways will be, for He pledged His word that the gates of hell should not prevail against her.

Every year increases the popularity of this valuable Hair Preparation; which is due to merit alone. We can assure our old patrons that it is kept fully up to its high standard; and it is the only reliable and perfected preparation for restoring GRAY OR FADED HAIR to its youthful color, making it soft, lustrous, and silken. The scalp, by its use, becomes white and clean. It removes all eruptions and dandruff, and, by its tonic properties, prevents the hair from falling out, as it stimulates and nourishes the hair-glands. By its use, the hair grows thicker and stronger. In baldness, it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, and will create a new growth, except in extreme old age. It is the most economical Hair Dressing ever used, as it requires fewer applications, and gives the hair a splendid, glossy appearance. A. A. Hayes, M.D., State Assayer of Massachusetts, says, "The constituents are pure, and carefully selected for excellent quality; and I consider it the BEST PREPARATION for its intended purposes."
