

HANNES-JACOB OF HOPPACH.

FROM THE GRIMAN.

There is a story told of a tailor in Nonsadt, on the Aisch, who, when the city was besieged by an enemy, and almost reduced by starvation...

On the way from Eschton to Hoppach you pass a high, steep mountain, on this mountain stood the castle of Wildenstein.

The Counts of Rieneck, who long ago inhabited this castle, would scarcely have believed that the place would ever be desolate; unless, perhaps, when the last of the race, who, when all his retainers had either fled or been killed, tried to escape with his chaplain, by a subterranean passage...

But money and goods do not always save, and an ingenious mind is worth far more than gold and silver, as those notions once proved by experience in the course of their quarrels with the men of Menz.

A MAN in Cayuga county, N. Y., has a singular custom. China roaster. He has observed his master's practice of family worship, and as soon as the Bible is taken to bed, before prayer, the roaster walks in deliberately and takes his stand beside the lady of the house, and there remains in a very quiet and reverent posture during the whole service...

A REMEDY FOR SMALL POX. It would appear from the following, published in the New York Freeman's Journal of Nov. 25th, that a certain Major Lane, of that city, is the possessor of a fine Indian remedy for the small pox. If this remedy should by all means be tested by our regular physicians, now that this terrible disease is sweeping the country at such a fearful rate. No matter how it was discovered, if it is a remedy it is just what the world wants. A card in a more recent issue of the paper alluded to gives Major Lane's address as No. 23 Canton Slip, New York. Here is what the editor himself says about it: "Small Pox." "Go From Home to Learn The News." We are very sorry to learn the following from the Western Watchman, of St. Louis: "The demon small pox has again put in an appearance in New York, N. J. and this time no less in a place than the Episcopal residence adjacent to St. Patrick's Catholic Church. The victim is Rev. Father A. M. Steens, one of the lately ordained clergymen. It seems that, in pursuance of his sacred duty, he visited a poor person's house and called on the Hill, one of whose family was afflicted with the disease, and then caught it. One patient, Dr. James Elliott, attended both cases, and failed to report either, as required by an ordinance under a penalty of $50 each. It is to recover this amount in both cases have been commenced against the Doctor. He was greatly mortified on discovering that the Health Inspector had notified the case of Father Steens. Rev. Father Doane was surprised that the case was not reported." "We are very sorry that Father Steens, when he found that he had the small pox, did not send a messenger to New York to get a package of Major Lane's Small-Pox Remedy. If he had done so, and had taken it according to directions, at least before the third day of the disease, he would have been cured of it, as gently, and almost as quickly, as the itching of a mosquito bite is cured by a touch of a mixture of salt and water." "A young priest in Brooklyn, a few weeks ago, visited a parishioner suffering from the small pox. His physician had pronounced it a bad case, and that the chances were in favor of a fatal result. This priest had, lately, been reading in the Freeman one of our paragraphs about the 'Remedy for Small Pox'; that, out of gratitude for his military protection, the Major Lane and his communications to Major Lane, and the positive effects of the remedy, he immediately tried a considerable quantity of the Major Lane's Remedy, got some of the 'Remedy' prepared it according to order, gave it to the man, and—next day the man was free of the disease, and was suffering only from the weakness incident to what he had undergone. One of our subscribers, a leading lawyer in a town in the interior, saw the Steens' Remedy noticed in our columns. He was attacked with what was called the small-pox. He obtained and administered the 'Remedy.' The fever was in fact, the disease cast out; and the physician—of course—concluded that he had been mistaken in the diagnosis, and that it had not been a small-pox! But a short time afterwards, a poor way-faring laborer was attacked, in that town, with small-pox. The physician declared was small-pox. Our friend, the lawyer, hearing of it, was on hand, wishing to give the sufferer the benefit of the 'Remedy.' In one way or other this was hindered for two days longer—during which the poor patient had been carried beyond the hospital limits and lodged in some solitary shed. By this time, his was a full-blown case of confluent small pox. His friend, at length, notified of the opportunity, in 1850, the 'Remedy.' The next day he was cured of his disease; though, of course, very weak. Our friend the lawyer sent us a graphic account of it, at the time we asked some of our friends to tell us of the success, or of the failure, of the Remedy, when prepared and administered under their own constant inspection. We would gladly have published it—but, unfortunately, our friend had a horror of newspaper notoriety. 'Do not get my name in the name of the place.' So, of course, with our rates, we could not publish it. Dr. B., of Troy, has written attesting to the specific character of the cure of small-pox he has witnessed. He cannot belong to the secret society of out-bound physicians, or he would not dare thus to acknowledge the potency of an Indian Remedy compounded of other roots besides the Sarcozona Purpurea, for the cure of small-pox. We are glad to know from Major Lane that, through our notices, a great many have been applying to him. But we beg leave to say that it is only in the interests of human welfare—and that, especially, of our friends and readers—that we are occupied with this matter. We had, long ago, found the benefit of another of Major Lane's Medicinal preparations, the 'Indian Liniment'—with which, to our knowledge, the Baron Rothschild used liberally to supply himself, every year, through Mr. Ang Belmont. We were satisfied, twelve years ago, in regard to the efficacy of the Remedy for Small Pox. But, having known the disease thirty years ago—having visited patients often, and, in one instance, having nursed a poor abandoned fellow through a black case of the confinement as a man ever had, and recovered—we chose to 'see for ourselves.' In 1850, the sight, and the success of the cure, were to us, old acquaintances. Next day the poor fellow was sitting up; the disease—and it was a serious case—was gone; and nothing but the weakness after fever was left. Eye-sight was added to testimony. The point of attraction for us, personally, in setting forth this specific remedy for small-pox is our horror of socialistic 'isms'—we specify not in reference to the small pox, we would rather see any child of ours might have the small-pox twice, rather than be vaccinated. Were we present on both occasions, we would rather a child of ours were bitten by a rattlesnake than be 'vaccinated' by any physician living. The one poison could be fathomed. The other eludes all acknowledged remedies. A SINGULAR INCIDENT occurred at Lewiston, Maine, week before last, which may afford physicians a hint respecting the treatment of that hitherto unmanageable disease, diphtheria. A factory girl of that city, while suffering from this complaint, was attacked with a severe coughing, when the nurse discovered what seemed to be a foreign substance in the patient's throat, seized the end of it, and to her surprise and alarm pulled out the false membrane. This act saved the sufferer. A physician of that city now has the membrane in his possession. It is about three inches in length, completely preserved, of a white leathery substance, and so thick that it retains the shape of the air passage from which it was withdrawn. It has heretofore been suggested that diphtheria and other diseases might be treated mechanically, and crump has sometimes yielded to the surgeon. You may find fashions in town, but you meet with more styles in the country.
