So another to find They started, you be: ! In a small, little kitchen. The guests old assemble, With hearts very light

And toes very nimble. Bat some guests did remark The room was too small, And not a fit place

For a calico ball! Which roused the good lady And the scene that ensued Was decidedly rich.

She looked all around, The assemblage to scan, Then put out the light, And the exit began.

In less than a moment The deed it was done, And out on the street,

She turned every one. But the gents were determined Success to insure,

And a hall in an attic They next did procure, But the ladies objected

Thus ended the squark.

He is at different places along the road and in different shapes. One night last week, after the Philadelphia Express lind left Tyrone station, his satanic majesty got on the engine with Sol. Hofmaster. He looked around for a moment, then taking the poker from the fireman, opened the fire-door and stirred the fire, at the same time sticking his feet in. He then sat down, stretched out his immense legs and bring. down.stretched out his immense legs and bring-ing his tail around laid it between his cloven Sometimes wings could be seen about his shoulders. He was very perticular about the fire; sometimes he would put his head in the fire-box and look around, then throw in his tail, stirring the fire at a rapid rate. By this time be had got warmed up, and so had the engineer and fireman, who were nearly seared to death. The engine was making about thirty-five miles an hour, when the devil picked up the oil-can and went out and oiled the locomotive in all its parts. He then returned and requested Mr. Hormaster to slack up and let him off at Bridge No. 5, but Mr. H. told him he might get off the same way he got on. The engine was then running at a fearful rate of speed, and Mr. Devil stepped to one side and disappeared.

Mr. Devil stepped to one side and disappeared.
We learn since that a phantom train was seen in the vicinity of the Gap. Some nights ago. David Wayne, engineer of 477, had stepped for some purpose, when a train was heard approaching at a rapid rate. Knowing there was no train due at that hour, schedules were examined carefully, but the stranger could not be made out. At length it came thundering around the curve with an immense headight and other equipments. The conductor, H. Bell, engineer, fireman and brakeman all saw and heard the train coming. The flagman, John K. Newell, immediately went back with a light and placed signal case. signal caps upon the rails. The phantom train came, making the usual noise and lighting up the whole track with its lurid glare, when in a twinkling it disappeared. Some say it was old Amos Clemson's train—the notorious leader of
