LOVERS' LEAP,

A ROMANCE OF INDIAN LIFE.

No summer tourist of a remantic turn, happening to be near Lansing, lows, will omit seeing the "Lovers' Leap," as it is called, of which this Indian legend is told: On the whole line of the Mississippi river there is not, perhaps, any grander scenery than that about Lansing, lowa. A short | 00 distance below the town, on the west side oo Luscious Ice Cream, of the river, stands a noble bluff, shooting | 00 four hundred feet. The base of the bluff, which is only a few rods from the water's edge, is fronted by a sloping beach, thick set by rough, jugged rocks, among which opposedoor The summit of the bluff fails off gracefully into a fine level tract of land, covered on Foreign FRUITS, NUTS, &c., on in summer with a luxuriant growth of grass and flowers, while the brink of the steep ends abruptly in a broad, naked poor river, both above and below, can be had oooo PRIME TREST CROCERES, cooo Upon this rock the Indians used to meet | 0000 to recount their deeds of war, engage in their wild dances, and view the face of nature so pleasantly spread out in broad beauty below. Here, long ago, a band belonging to the tribe of the Winnebagoes opposition of the Winnebagoes oppositions of the Winnebagoes had camped for the night. Among their | oo number was En-ow-kaw kaw, a beautiful oo And Other Seasonable Luxuries, oo girl, the daughter of Wah-ma-naw-kawkaw, the medicine man of the tribe .-There were two young men in the com-Thunder, and Rob-kaw, the great hunter each held him back from even a word or a sign that could in any way decide the contest in the maiden's breast as which of the two she should choose. The slightest indication from him would have settled the case, but he would not do it. Thus the matter stood on the night when the band stood about the camp-fire on the broad rock overlooking the great river. The rivals, sitting in silent gloom at the fire, eyed each other apart, and though they never talked together on the subject of their jealousy, they instinctively understood the whole difficulty. In full view where the firelight dwelt warmest, sat the lovely En-ow-kaw-kaw on a mat, weaving a necklace of beads. She looked pretrier than ever before in the eyes of the dusky woods. They glanced at each other. At last one of them spoke a word which the other construed into a menace, when they both sprang to their feet, and in the first moment of rage challenged each other to a test of courage for the hand of the young woman -a test no less hazardous than that of leaping over the for ad rock to the level below. In an nstant they flung away their blankets, NEW DRAW FEED and, each eager to be first, ran to the edge and leaped off at once into the pale moonlight and the sleep of death

The band went down the winding path on the side of the bluff, stretched out the mangled bodies of the foolish lovers on the green grass, and while they stood in dismal sorrow around them, a wild, weird strain was heard from the rock above. En-ow-kaw kaw was chanting the death requiem, which told that she, too, had determined there to end her life. Her father, the medicine man, knew the meaning of the song, and with a step as light and swift as a tiger's be ascended 19 FIFTH AVE., PITTSBURGH, PA. [6-22.-Sm.g. the path, stole up behind her, seized her in his arms and bore her away, In the morning the bodies were interred with all the ancestral rites of Indian burial, the band went gloomily away, and since that time no camp fire has been lighted upon | Three Doors West of Centre Street, the rock : but the view from the height is as grand as ever, and men have agreed that the place shall always be known as the Layers' Lore the Lovers' Leap.

"THAT'S HOW."-After a great snow storm, a little fellow began to shovel a path thro' a snow bank before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you expect to get through that drift ?" asked a man passing along. "By keeping at it," said the boy cheerfully : "that's how !"
