In the days when Ingland protected the I main Isles, an Albanian sheep-dog lived in the chadel of Corfu. His mane was nero, short for Spiridus, the pation saint of the place (the name Spero, amongst Corrotto, answering to Jack with the Pritish; but he was also called "The Sun-altern's Companion," for there was a subaltern's guard at the chiadel gate, and when the officer commanding it took over the various properties of the guard-room, Spero insisted on being taken over too. For twenty-four hours that officer was his master and his friend; but once relieved he would barely notice him, his allegiance being transferred to the next comer. He was on good tail-wagging terms with all Englishmen, however, but hated his own countrymen like rats. If a Greek gentleman, attired in the garments common to all upper-class Europeans, entered the British quarter on a visit, Spero merely growled and retired; but when a native, clad in petticoats, greaves, and gandy sash, presumed to come over the drawbridge, Spero rushed at him with unmistakable hostile intentions, and had to be held. As for going into the town where the objects having left it up to the time of his taking his two months' leave. For one day Spero said to himself : "I am getting on in years; my taculties are all right at present, but they cannot remain so forever, and as I should like to see the country of my adoption before I die, I had better not lose any more time,' such a thing. At what period of his pup-

So who the next mail steamer was starting he went down to the landingplace, jumped into the first boat that put off for the vessel, and walked on board as coolly as if he had paid his cabin fare. There was no fear about his reception; Jack is a wonderful fellow for pets; and as n ither birds, beast, nor baby happened to be on board, Spero was master of the situation, and had a very pleasant voyage to Southampton. When the vessel was moored alongside the quny, Spero stepped on shore, and disappeared for a fortnight. There is absolutely no trace of him during that time, so that how far he extended his linvestigations, the data upon which he formed his judgment of England, considered as a canine residence, and what tlat judgment was, must ever remain a n yst ry. One thing I am perfectly certam of, if his impressions could be correctly interp etcd, and given to the world, they would be well worth perusing; and that is more than can be said for all travel-

On the fourteenth day-I think it was the fourteenth, but in minor matters I cannot vouch for accuracy, as I write from memory of what happened sixteen or eighteen years ago-Spero reappeared at Southampton, somewhat leaner than when he landed, but in very good case, and re-embarked himself on a Corfu-bound boat. He made his passage in safety, and turned up in his old place at the citadelgute one morning when the guard was being mounted.

There is every reason to hope that the result of his visit was not altogether unworable to the English character; for he did not withdraw his friendship for the British officer, but continued to be the sub-litera's companion, when that subaltom was on guard as 'eretofore.

I know that this feat of Spero's is not half so strange as some that have been recorded of other dogs, but it is worth mention as howing thought and design. What the old fellow's motive was we cannot guess, but he must have had one. What bothered me most for a long time was. how he managed to pick out the right vessel at Southampton when he wanted to return home; but it occurred to me at iast that he probably recognised some sailar employed on that route, and followed himson board.

Poor old Spero! he died before his friends, the English, accorded to the romantic desire of the Septinsulars, to ruin themselves for an idea, and I am sorry to say that his days were cut short by violence. Once again he quitted the citadel and visited the landing-place-whether meditating another trip or not cannot be toldand a native policeman, a creature who carried a double-barrelled carbine instead of a truncheon, shot him.

A BOY TRAVELER .- The St. Louis, Mis souri, Republican of the 27th ult. relates a story of the peregrinations of Johnnie McGill, aged seven years, which taxes the wonder of the reader to the utmost. This young Livingstone was born in New York, and resided there until he was five years of age. He then took it into his head to travel and see the world. Johnnie boarded a train and went West to seek his fortune. Unable to find tidings of him, his parents mourned him as dead. He was merely traveling, however, and through some accident his parents heard of his whereabouts. Shortly after the return of this prodigal McGill and his wife, with young hopeful, started for the West and settled in St. Louis. Johnnie was not satisfied. He started for the East this time, and it was some months before his parents heard of him. He was brought home again, and his parents removed to Quincy, Ill., very soon thereafter. Again Johnnie becomes restless, and left his parents' house and the city of Quincy. The story become muddled here, as Johnnie we are happy to state, is admirably fitted for a traveler, as he has "learned to lie," the accomplishment so much desired by the fool in Lear. Suffice it to say he was found near the Centerville station, about five weeks ago, on a train bound South, on the Believille and Illinois Central railroad. The engineer took him in charge and kept him until his mother found has FURLIUM AND BUNESTILL BRY GOODS the other day and took him home. This is just as clear a case of mania for travel as any of the numerous instances of wealthy lords stealing napkins is of kleptomania.

A LIGHTNING FREAK.-The following strange freak of lightning is related by a Connecticut paper: "The electric fluid entered at the window of a room in the CARPETS AND OIL CLOTHS, second story where a boy lay in bed, but not asleep. It leaped across the room to GLASS WARE, YELLOW WARE, the wall, crossing the bed where the boy lay, and tore both the sheets on the bed into fragments, scorching one badly, but leaving the boy unharmed. The boy, wild with fear, came running down stairs, entirely naked, and don't recollect whether he took off his night-shirt himself, or whether the lightning took it off for kim. He was unharmed, not even stunned. He said that he lay "cuddled" down into the bed (a large feather bed), SUMMER GOODS! Some years ago, a physician in New York city published a small book, in which he gave well written certificates of marvellous erres of dyspensia. Patients began to flock to alm. After the introduction of his patient into his consultation office, examined his case, and if it was one he could cure, he announced his fee as five hundred dollars to be paid in advance. If the patient's confidence was strong enough the money was paid, and hen the doctor took him through a hall, up a flight of stairs, through another hall, then through a room, down a flight of stairs, up a flight, down a flight, then to the right, then to the left, and at last they arrived at a small room without windows, artificially lighted and in that room the patient was required to put his name to a so emn vow that he would never reveal the mode of treatment. This being all finished, the patient was introduced to the treatment. It consisted in slapping the stomach and bowels. Besides this, the patient was required to live temperately and much in the open air. On rising in the morning, he was required to spend from five to ten minutes in striking his own abdomen with the flats of his hands. Then he went out tumbler or two of cold water. At eleven o'clock in the forenoon he spent a quarter of an hour, or more, in slapping the bowels with his hands. Then he laid down to rest. He dired temperately at two o'clock, and spent the afternoon in sauntering about, At seven o'clock in the evening he reat nine o'clock. A majority of the cases of dyspepsia that sought relief at this establishment had used all the other means except the slapping; that is to say, they had lived on plair food and much in the open air. fists of an attendant, that cured these people; for cured they certainly were. Marrelions cures were affected at this establishment. After the death of the doctor, some the obligation, and one of them described the treatment to me. In ever case of indigestion, no matter what may be its character, slapping the stemuch or bowels with the flats of the hands on rising in the morning, our hours after breakfast and in the evening is an excellent treatment. I cannot con- Tooth Brushes, all kinds and sizes; Bed ceive of a case of chronic indigestion which such manipulation would not relieve. If the patient be so weak that he cannot perform these slappings or kneadings upon his own person, the hand of a discreet assistant should be employed. It is marvellous how the body, the stomach for example, which when the manipulations are first practiced, may be so very tender that the slightest touch can hardly be borne-it is marvellous how in two or three weeks a blow almost as hard as the hand can give is borne without suffering. If you have a pain in the side or across the chest, percussion will relieve it almost immediately, But constipation, dyssis, torpidity of liver and other affections of the abdominal viscera are relieved more sure y and completely than any other class of afections by percussion, kneading, etc. Such treatment comes under the head of counterirritation. A new circulation is established in the parts near the point of suffering and congestion. Besides this, especially in abdominal troubles, the manipulations appeal directly to the contracility of the weak, relaxed vessels in the affected part.-Dio

"WATER-SMELLING."-A correspondent of the Lewistown Democrat adds this to the list of "unaccountables:"

Accordingly, Mr. J. came, and having gone through "the photograph albums motions," located the well; but not in the than ever offered in this place. place where Mr. C. wished it; and he, not having strong faith in the "smelling" process tail. concluded not to dig at Mr. J.'s location, but dog where he wanted the well, although Mr. J. told him he would not get water there should be dig 100 feet deep, but guaranteed water where he (J.) located the well, within 35 feet. After Mr. C. at a heavy expense had dug 40 feet, he abandoned the well, and commenced on the location of Mr. Johnson. He has now just finished the new well, and has water at the depth of 23 feet. He is fully converted. He believes there is some thing in" water-smelling" now.

Mr. Johnson's modus operandi is as follows; He cuts from a peach limb a forked branch, the branches about 15 or 20 inches long, the butt 3 or 4 inches. He takes one branch in each hand, holding his hands about a foot apart, the butt standing upright before him, and walks slowly and steadily over the ground. Presently the butt turns down toward the ground. He goes back a few steps, creets his branch again, and resumes his walk; and at the same place where it turned down, down it goes again. Here's back a step or two, erects his forked branch, and comes slowly up, and down it goes again. Now he stands still. He turns the branch up; tries to hold it, but down it comes. He stands and repeats the experiment until the branch refuses to turn down any more. He then multiplies the number of times it turned down by seven, and he has the depth of the well in feet.
